Burning of Kramer In Effigy Rapped

Hearing to Be in Nature of Trial for Those Linked With Riot.

Students of McKinley High School last night were planning to move en masse on the Board of Education today, cutting classes in violation of school regulations, to present in person their demand that the Washington interscholastic championship football schedule be played out.

Pupils in all the city's high schools were vigorously opposed to a decision by school heads this week to cancel remaining games on the football schedule reached as a result of a riot after the McKinley-Western contest last Friday.

At McKinley, a large part of the student body was bent on flouting school discipline and attending a meeting of the board in Franklin School at 10:30 a. m. today., at which the whole future course of high school football this season will be on trial, and to which the board has invited the public and all parties concerned with Friday's riot and subsequent developments.

Walkout Is Considered.

At the same time the students talked grimly of plans to stage a walkout Monday unless the board lifts the ban.

Student leaders believed it possible that the student bodies at other high schools—Roosevelt, Eastern, Western and Central—would strike in sympathy with McKinley unless their demands are granted.

Antagonism against Dr. Stephen E. Kramer and Dr. Frank W. Ballou, assistant superintendent and superintendent of schools, respectively, whom the students hold responsible for the football ruling, was bitter in all schools. But at Tech the feeling was especially high. The team had appeared to be certain champions. Banquets and celebrations had been planned. The students felt school officials were robbing them of their rightful football heritage.

Rioters are Censured.

In contrast with the actual hostility of their feeling, 2,200 McKinley students, called yesterday morning in the school auditorium by their principal, Frank C. Daniel, voted censure for the student group that burned Dr. Kramer in effigy in the school stadium and then stormed his home Wednesday night.

Then Mr. Daniel appointed an "apology" committee and accompanied them to board of education offices to tell Dr. Kramer of the student action. Dr. Kramer was at home, made ill by the nerve-wracking demonstration of the evening before, and the committee called instead on Dr. Ballou.

4 Men Perish In Grain Blaze

$2,000,000 Property Loss at Newport News Is Estimated.

Newport News, Va., Nov. 8 (AP).—Four men burned to death in a fire that leveled the mammoth Chesapeake & Ohio grain elevator here late today.

The dead were George Martin, Jacob Ellis, sr., George Thomasson and Charles Shelton. Announcement that they had succumbed in the flames was made by F. A. Peterson, superintendent of the elevator.

One other man, Jacob Ellis, jr., was seriously burned and three others at work in the elevator escaped unhurt or with minor injuries.

The fire was believed to have started from a dust explosion.

Ellis said he was on fire when he came out of the elevator, and a policeman smothered the flames. He was rushed to a hospital.

The property loss was estimated at $2,000,000. The fire was still burning tonight, but was under control.

Hauptmann's Counsel Seeks Jury's Minutes

Flemington, N. J., Nov. 8 (AP).—Edward J. Reilly, of Brooklyn, chief defense counsel for Bruno Richard Hauptmann, announced today he and his associate, Lloyd Fisher, will ask the State to furnish them with a bill of particulars in the case and also with the minutes of the Hunterdon County grand jury, which indicted Hauptmann for murder in the Lindbergh kidnap-slaying.

Reilly made the announcement after a conference with Fisher and a visit to Hauptmann's cell.

Grand Jurors Reopen Bern Death Inquiry

Asks Records Just After Harlow Says She'll Divorce Rosson.

Los Angeles, Nov. 8 (AP).—The suicide of Paul Bern, second husband of Jean Harlow, was brought back into the official spotlight today when a county grand jury asked the district attorney for all records of Bern's death.

Just a few hours before the jury's request, Miss Harlow, in Hollywood, announced she would divorce Hal Rosson, her third husband, from whom she has been separated for several months.

The same county jury recently indicted District Attorney Buron Fitts on perjury charges growing out of the Los Angeles "Girl Mart" case.

Fitts' office suggested the grand jury "probably" wanted to "go into the expenditures" of Fitts on his inquiry into the film director's suicide, but the investigators indicated the jury might wish to delve into the circumstances of the death.

The district attorney's records supposedly were handed over to C. E. Memory, an assistant auditor employed by the grand jury during the Fitts investigation.

Mystery Note Involved.

Among the documents reputedly taken over by the investigators was the note supposedly written by Bern to his bride just before he died in the bathroom of the home he had built for Miss Harlow. He had been shot.

The note said, "This is the only way to make good the frightful wrong I have done you."

It carried a postscript saying, "You understand last night was only a comedy."

The meaning of the note never was publicly explained.

Another strange ramification of the case was the death of Dorothy Millette, who allegedly had lived for years as Bern's common-law wife. Shortly after Bern died, Miss

Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek Escapes Death in Blast

Shanghai, Nov. 8 (AP).—Gen. Chiang Kai-Shek, China's most powerful military and political figure, escaped death November 6, when his train was bombed, it was learned today.

He was traveling from Tatung to Suiyuan in Shansi Province on a tour of inspection when the bomb exploded, wrecking the last car of his special train, killing two guards, and wounding four.

Tighter Law On Gambling Is Proposed

Prettyman Sends Bill to Business, Civic Bodies for Comment.

Prison Sentence Made Mandatory for Those Running Table.

Major developments in the war against crime in Washington yesterday were:

E. Barrett Prettyman, corporation counsel, has drawn up a proposed law which would provide heavy penalties for numbers game operators. Copies of the bill are being distributed to business and civic organizations for comment.

The committee sponsored by the Bar Association which began as as the "permanent committee on criminal justice" changed its name to "citizens' committee on crime," and began work.

Washington's murder rate is increasing and the city has the second highest homicide rate among the eight comparable cities. There were 81 murders in the last fiscal year, more killed than the District lost in the armed forces during the World War.

A maximum fine of $1,000 and three years' imprisonment is provided for numbers game operators and their agents under terms of a bill sent yesterday by E. Barrett Prettyman, corporation counsel, to business and civic organizations of the District for comment.

The measure was transmitted to women's clubs and trade and civic organizations as part of the plan of Mr. Prettyman to have prepared a program of District legislation prior to the convening of Congress in January.

The bill is the same proposed at the last session of Congress by United States District Attorney Leslie C. Garnett. The measure passed the Senate, but died in the House in the closing days of the session.

Revival at Height of Feud.

Special significance was attached to its revival at this time because of the feud which has broken out in the ranks of gamblers. Their shootings came to a climax recently with the murder of an innocent man by gunmen apparently lying in wait for "Mickey" McDonald, numbers game operator.

Under the bill, possession of "tickets, certificates, bills, slips, tokens or other device" shall be prima facie evidence of the purpose of the possessor to violate the law by "selling, transferring, exchanging or negotiating the same."

A prison sentence is made mandatory for persons convicted of setting up a gaming table. The maximum term is fixed at five years. No alternative fine is specified. That section of the bill includes "devices in connection therewith," as well as those mentioned and enumerates the following: ABC, faro bank, EO, roulette, equality, keno, thimbles or little joker, numbers "or any kind of gaming table or gambling device adapted, devised and designed for the purpose of playing any game of chance for money or property."

Would Affect Landlords.

Persons, including landlords, who permit gambling on premises of which they have "possession or control," would be subject to $1,000 fine.

Books and pools on all kinds of races and contests are forbidden and the operator and group conducting such pools are made subject to a fine of $500.

Broad authority to issue search warrants on an affidavit by an individual is given judges of the Police Court and the United States Commissioner. Police have complained that they have not been able to get into known gambling places in many cases to justify a search warrant.

Man Strangles Wife, Kills Children, Self

Stoneham, Mass., Nov. 8 (AP).—Police tonight said Jewell Lidquist, about 26, had strangled his wife, stabbed to death his two children, 2 years old and 12 days old, and then hanged himself.

The tragey was discovered tonight, but police believed it had occurred early this morning.

Breaks Own Transport Plane Mark Almost by an Hour.

By Henry McLemore.
(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Newark, N. J., Nov. 8.—Blazing through the sub-stratosphere like a silver comet, a giant Douglas airliner under command of Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, with the writer and four others aboard, tonight swerved down on the mile-long runway of this airport to establish a new coast-to-coast record for passenger planes.

Just as the sun rose beyond the hills surrounding Union Air Terminal at Los Angeles today, we hammered down a take-off track, stuck our nose toward the heavens, leveled off and headed for home.

Twelve hours, three minutes and 50 seconds later the big ship rolled to a stop here, breaking the mark of 13 hours, 2 minutes, established by America's great war ace in February of this year.

We made only one stop—at Kansas City—where a ground crew of 50, working like beavers, swarmed about the ship to pour 750 gallons of gasoline and 150 gallons of oil into her silver side.

As the last drop gurgled in, after a pause of 12 minutes, burly Si

Says Regular Schedule of 10-Hour Flights Now Feasible.

By Eugene Meyer.

On the basis of a friendship extending for over 20 years with Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, I took the liberty of calling him on the telephone at the Newark Airport to congratulate him on his record-breaking flight.

Weary of voice, Capt. Rickenbacker nevertheless spoke animatedly of his trip and the new horizons he believes it opens to transport aviation.

"With favorable weather and winds, we could have saved at least another hour," he said. "We had planned to take the great circle route, the shortest across, but when we began to get altitude, wind currents forced us to change our course.

"We followed instead the T. W. A. course, which is longer, and necessarily cut down our time."

The great plane was pushed to only 75 per cent of its potential horsepower in making the crossing, but attained an average speed of 221 miles per hour, Capt. Rickenbacker said. At one time, when winds favored, the high speed of 245 miles per hour was recorded.

I asked the captain what he

President Sees Advisers; Resumes Attacks on Fiscal Problems.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Predictions from Capitol Hill that next year's budget will approximate in size and scope the towering program of emergency outlays approved last winter came yesterday with President Roosevelt's return to the White House.

Back at his desk, the Chief Executive summoned financial and recovery advisers for a report of progress, and went briskly ahead with plans for the 1936 budget and its interrelated problems of relief, public works and taxation.

At the other end of Pennsylvania avenue, responsible Democratic leaders forecast privately that recent moves for economy will be subordinated until recovery definitely is accomplished.

Vote Dispels Doubt.

Any doubt existing about next year's expenditures was dispelled by Tuesday's overwhelming victory at the polls, it was said. This triumph was interperted by these members as a mandate for continuing present spending policies, at least for the immediate future.

Hence, influential members of the party concede they have abandoned efforts toward balancing the budget until two or three years hence, when they forsee an inevitable adjustment that of necessity will involve a sizable increase in taxation.

On this question, as on all other matters pertaining to the forthcoming budget, the White House maintains a strict silence. In the opinion of the President, any comment is futile until a definite plan, rounding up all the New Deal alphabetical agencies into one financial program, has been completed for submission to Congress.

The importance now attached to the 1936 budget was enhanced, when Mr. Roosevelt, on his first day back from Hyde Park, called in Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., and Daniel W. Bell, the acting director of the budget.

He also conferred with Jesse H.

Daughter of McAdoo Will Wed Next Week

Los Angeles, Nov. 8 (AP).—Ellen Wilson McAdoo, daughter of Senator William Gibbs McAdoo, of California, is to marry Rafael Lopez de Onate, Manila-born film actor, next week.

The couple made the announcement late today as they prepared to go to the county clerk's office to take out the marriage license for which they applied nearly three weeks ago.

Revised Party Set-up Is Seen By La Follette

Wisconsin Progressive Is Luncheon Guest of Roosevelt.

By Robert C. Albright.

Senator Robert M. La Follette, jr., of the Wisconsin third party La Follettes, mixed fruits of victory with a White House diet yesterday, and the result was a bold prediction.

Gazing with newspapermen into the political crystal, the Progressive Senator forecast a new party realignment, based on economic forces rather than politics.

Senator La Follette, whose Progressive Party ticket in Wisconsin rode in with the swell of a nationwide Democratic triumph at the polls, broke bread with the President at luncheon yesterday.

Good-Will Overture.

It was a good-will overture the President has not extended to any members of his own political family since the election, and the gesture was interpreted at once as an astutely-timed bid for continued Progressive support.

Hoarse but happy after 300 speeches in his own campaign, Wisconsin's dark, diminutive Bob tarried a few minutes in the Executive Mansion's lobby to discuss with reporters his personal appraisal of Tuesday's election upheaval.

His forecast was more significant because of the uniform success of all Progressive Republican candidates. La Follette is the first of the group definitely to break with Republican politics and organize his own third party movement.

Views Will Have Weight.

His views will have weight with Progressive colleagues, who return to Washington equally flushed with victory. Senator Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota, recently announced he also will "go third party" if the Republcans do not liberalize. Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, repeatedly has called for "junking" all party labels.

Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, who returns to Washington today; Senator Hiram Johnson, who won with Democratic aid in California; Senator Lynn Frazier, apparently reelected in North Da-

Queen Mary Hails Art By Sporting New Hat

London, Nov. 8 (AP).—For the first time in many years, Queen Mary appeared in public today with another type of hat than her own particular brand of ungarnished toque.

'36 Victory Certain Now, Farley Holds

Predicts President Will Triumph by Almost Unanimous Vote.

Move to Revive G.O.P. Near; La Follette Is Roosevelt Guest.

By Raymond Clapper.

Asserting the Republican Party was "through" as a result of its second disaster in two years, Democratic National Chairman Farley last night predicted President Roosevelt would be reelected in 1936 and that it would be "practically unanimous."

Republicans brushed aside this death sentence from the Democratic side and began to show numerous signs of life. Calls for reorganization of the party came from Republican leaders. National Chairman Fletcher went to New York to confer over the party's future course. It was plain the election had stirred a new ferment in the Republican Party. The blow of this second decisive defeat apparently has stirred it from a stupor, and there were scattered indications that new blood is shortly due to course its veins.

Senator Robert M. La Follette, victorious in his reelection fight which put his new Progressive Party firmly on the map in Wisconsin, came to Washington as President Roosevelt's first post-election luncheon guest. La Follette predicted a new national political realignment.

He is setting out on a national speaking tour to explain the Progressive Party's policies. It is a left-wing experiment and one which Mr. Roosevelt, it might be inferred from his gesture of cordiality yesterday, hopes to keep enfolded within the arms of the New Deal, rather than be left outside to throw rocks.

The American Liberty League began to show signs of life also, and from New York came indications it is about to start to work. It is a right-wing organization, amply financed, nonpartisan, but commanding a war chest and a degree of enthusiasm among influential conservatives sufficient to give it political potentialities.

Whether it evolves into a political party in fact if not in name may depend a good deal upon developments. If the Republican party should be unable to stagger to its feet and get under way again, the league might be expected to take its place, for, as Nature abhors a vacuum, politics demands an opposition. For the moment, the league insists upon confining its efforts toward obtaining satisfactory legislation protecting both property and human rights.

Beams of Triumph.

Chairman Farley returned to Washington yesterday and received the press—with open arms, beam-

Byrd Felicitation From a Cold Spot Warms Sunny Jim

Munich Police Release Judge Ross and Party

Munich, Germany, Nov. 8 (U.P.). Judge James Ross, Tacoma, Wash., Democratic leader, his wife and chauffeur were released tonight at Ansbach, Upper Bavaria, after being held since Saturday, when their automobile struck and killed an elderly peasant.

The chauffeur was sentenced to two months in jail, but Ross obtained his release by paying a fine of 1,080 marks and costs. Ross also paid 4,000 marks which the widow demanded.

Leader Discards Disputed Points

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Paris, Nov. 8 (AP).—A tentative cabinet that includes most of the members of Premier Gaston Doumergue's truce cabinet, which resigned today, was completed just before midnight by Pierre Etienne Flandin, Doumergue's successor as premier.

While heavy detachments of police and mobile guards patroled Paris to prevent repetition of the evening's disorders, when thousands massed before the Opera broke through police lines to cry "Down with the deputies!" Flandin managed to fill all but one cabinet post.

Edouard Herriot, leader of the Radical Socialist group that wrecked the Doumergue government, was assigned the post of minister of state without portfolio. He had been minister without portfolio and vice premier under Doumergue.

Other Changes.

Other changes in the Doumergue government, that fell after exactly nine months in power, included the following:

Deputy Georges Pernot, minister of public works, the post the new premier held under Doumergue.

Deputy Georges Mandel, minister of communications instead of Andre Mallarme, who was shifted to the education department, displacing Aime Berthod.

Yet to be filled was the ministry of merchant marine, which was occupied by William Bertrand in the Doumergue government.

Doumergue's Parting Shots.

The parting shots Doumergue fired at Herriot increased political bitterness and augmented fears that rioting might follow the truce government's overthrow.

He charged Herriot's radical Socialists with responsibility for "the riots of February and the death of the veterans who marched unarmed to the Place de la Concorde."

So hot were the flames of party hatred flaring up as Doumergue's resignation this morning ended the nine-months-long political truce that Pierre Laval, Doumergue's foreign minister and the cabinet's chief neutral, refused President Albert Lebrun's request that he become premier.

The President turned then to Flandin, minister of public works under Doumergue, aviator, politician and diplomat and the 45-year-old "coming man" of French politics.

A left Republican, Flandin stood as near the center of the French political line-up as any other available.

He needed all his resourcefulness tonight as mobs, surging against lines of policemen and mobile guards, threatened to start another "blood bath" such as that of the January and February Stavisky riots.

The towering Flandin—he is 6 feet 6 inches tall—took the job smiling, however, and hoped to suc-

Tokyo Dooms British Moves For Navy Pact

American Delegates Also Opposed to Proposal for Compromise.

London, Nov. 8 (AP).—Japan tonight stood pat on her demand for equality on the high seas.

Japanese delegates here for tri-power naval conversations have decided tentatively not to accept informal British proposals intended to break the deadlock, although these proposals went far toward embodying Tokyo's scheme for new methods of limiting navies, it was learned authoritatively.

A formal reply may be delayed until next week, however, and it was indicated the refusal would be so couched as to let the conversations continue.

Britain's Proposals.

The British proposals, presented when the two delegations met yesterday, were:

1.—The principle of Japan's right to equality would be recognized, but Nippon would promise not to exercise that right.

2.—Japan's plan for limiting navies on the total tonnage basis would be adopted, but limitation by categories and by number of ships, as in the Washington and London Treaties, would continue.

3. The Japanese demand for reducing or abolishing offensive ships would be toned down.

Tokyo dispatches today quoted naval spokesmen as saying Japan "can not accept any naval formula which, theoretically allotting parity, actually asks Japan to accept inferiority."

Americans Opposed.

As hostile to the compromise plan as the Japanese, although for different reasons, are the American delegates, Norman H. Davis and Admiral William H. Standley, who have fought for retention of the principles of the Washington and London pacts, which Japan means to denounce. There was no indication of any change in the American attitude.

There were indications the Japanese, even though they reject Britain's plan, nevertheless were pleased that it had been tendered. They appeared hopeful Great Britain would make still further concessions.

The Americans, on the other hand, are as determined as ever that the present relative naval strengths of the three countries—the 5—5—3 ratio—shall be maintained in any new treaty.

Auto Production Gains.

Detroit, Nov. 8 (AP).—The Automobile Manufacturers Association today reported production of automobiles and trucks by its members, which include all but one major producer of motor vehicles in the United States, was 31 per cent ahead of the same period last year.

Luigi Pirandello, Versatile Writer, Wins Nobel Prize

Stockholm, Nov. 8 (U.P.).—The Nobel Prize for literature today was awarded Luigi Pirandello, internationally-known Italian novelist and playwright.

His writings have been varied, including poetry, plays and prose. Pirandello was selected from a host of American and European literary figures mentioned for the prize this year, including Eugene O'Neill.

Among the best known works by Pirandello are "As You Desire Me," "The Mock Emperor" and "The Life I Gave You."

Baroness Betty Linley Is Granted a Divorce

Chicago, Nov. 8 (AP).—Alleging she was deserted by her husband in 1926, Baroness Ethel von Rischlawy, known to stage and radio as Betty Linley, was granted an uncontested divorce today by Superior Judge Francis B. Allegretti.

Miss Linley said her husband left her when she "stopped giving him money." The bill said the couple was married in 1918.

Dolly Gann's Parking Ticket Raises 'Did' and 'Didn't' Debate

Police yesterday were waiting to see what action would be taken by Mrs. Dolly Gann, sister of former Vice President Charles Curtis, in regard to a parking ticket given her chauffeur during the rush hour Wednesday afternoon on Fifteenth street, near H street northwest.

Although the first day of the three-day limit for action on the ticket had passed, neither Mrs. Gann, her brother nor her husband, Edward Gann, has recognized the ticket, police reported.

"The details of the case are unfamiliar to me, but that ticket will be handled through the regular channels," Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, declared yesterday.

The Gann limousine was parked in an area forbidden between 4 and 6 p. m. shortly before 5 p. m. Wednesday.

Policeman Charles W. Feagan came over to investigate, opening the rear door of the car after knocking first on the window.

"I'm sorry," said Policeman Feagan, "but you'll have to move the car or I'll have to give you a ticket."

"You can give me a ticket, but I'll get rid of it," Mrs. Gann is said to have replied.

Patrolman Feagan promptly wrote out the ticket.

"I said nothing of the kind to the policeman," Mrs. Gann asserted yesterday. "The reports are wrong.

"I've no statement to make to the newspapers, and whatever is done about the ticket is a private matter.

"I'm sorry, but there's nothing for the newspapers at all, and I don't want them to print anything."

New Faces in the Senate

No fewer than 10 new Senators will make their bow in the forthcoming Congress. What will they be like . . . their personalities and politics?

Beginning today, The Post turns the spotlight on these newcomers in a series of intensely interesting articles . . . illustrated by the inimitable caricaturist, Sebastian Robles. First to be introduced is George L. Radcliffe, ardent New Deal Democrat from Maryland. He is presented by Franklyn Waltman, jr., veteran reporter of every Maryland political battle for the last ten years. It's a story you can't afford to miss . . . and watch for the others daily on the page opposite the editorials.

First Lady Decides to Serve Wine at White House Parties

Wines, light and American, sparkling in two tall, graceful crystal glasses banded in gold and etched with the White House crest, will be served to each guest at state dinners in the White House this season.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt made the announcement during a press conference yesterday, adding that she herself would not touch the beverage.

She reminded reporters that, although the Cabinet dinner December 18 will be the first state dinner accompanied by wine since the preprohibition Administration of President Wilson, light wines and beer have been served at a few small dinners in the Executive Mansion since repeal became effective.

"If you don't want to drink it, just don't drink," she said. "With us it will be a very simple thing, simply serving wines to those who want them."

Two glasses would be plenty, she added, since one of the two should suit any wine-loving taste. The thought of old-time days when guests' plates were surrounded by glasses with new wines poured for every course was "not at all attractive," Mrs. Roosevelt said.

"Wine is not a necessary adjunct to social graces," Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, president of the W. C. T. U., remarked in Cleveland yesterday as she learned of Mrs. Roosevelt's decision.

"We are sorry that the Nation's official home should not hold the highest possible standard of idealism—the thing which has made our Nation great," she commented,

Leader Sought By Democrats For Maryland

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Defeat of Gov. Albert C. Ritchie for a fifth consecutive term has left Maryland Democrats leaderless and somewhat confused on the future prospects of their party, a survey of the situation revealed yesterday.

After the first shock over Harry W. Nice's 5,800-vote victory, Democrats immediately started to take stock of their situation and to speculate on who would become the party leader; what effect the Ritchie defeat would have on party prospects in the municipal election in Baltimore next spring and who would come to the front as the probable party nominee for Governor four years hence.

The Democrats found they had elected George L. Radcliffe to the Senate by a plurality in the neighborhood of 65,000 votes; had elected six members of Congress, Representative David J. Lewis in Western Maryland finally winning the only doubtful contest by 1,500 votes; had control of the State Legislature and of the local governments in all except two of the normally Democratic counties and had elected an attorney general and State comptroller of their political faith.

Nice Promises Best.

Harry W. Nice, Governor-elect, spent the day trying to break "Rip Van Winkle's record for sleeping" and when he finally got up issued a statement asserting he approached his new office with "fear and trembling." He said he would give the State his best efforts and would not concern himself with appointments for some weeks.

Mr. Nice said he planned to go to Florida for a vacation of several weeks and while there would formulate his program for a reorganization of at least the personnel of the State government and the policies he outlined in his campaign. It was recognized generally that hemmed in by a Democratic Legislature, which in turn will elect a Democratic State treasurer, and a Democratic attorney general and State comptroller, Mr. Nice will have a precarious path before him.

Meanwhile the defeat of Gov. Ritchie means the end of a political epoch in Maryland and a general scrambling of Democratic lines.

Ritchie Plans Vague.

In conceding his defeat, Gov. Ritchie said he had no intention of retiring from politics, although he had no immediate plans. The Governor, however, will not have another opportunity to stage a comeback before 1938 and much may happen in the four years which would definitely retire him as a force within his party.

With nothing to offer now in the way of patronage or political preferment, he will no longer be able to dominate his party throughout the State as he has for 15 years, although he may be recognized for some time as titular leader. But there is no one now in a position to take over the party reins immediately from Gov. Ritchie.

Senator Millard E. Tydings, with control of Federal patronage for Maryland in his hands, will be able to make a stronger claim as State leader than ony one else. Yet it is doubtful whether he will be able to obtain the sway in Baltimore that Gov. Ritchie held.

The Baltimore Democratic situation is likely to be a cat-and-dog fight for some time to come, with hostilities already under way. Mayor Howard W. Jackson wants to succeed himself in the city hall next spring, while William Curran and Robert B. Ennis, the dominant Democratic leaders in the city, remain bitterly opposed to him.

In the forthcoming battle over the Baltimore mayorality, Gov. Ritchie's defeat has helped the Jackson cause, because when adherents of the Curran-Ennis combination are being turned out of State jobs by Mr. Nice, the mayor will remain in control of a patronage trough.

This hostility in Baltimore between Jackson wings of the party was responsible for Gov. Ritchie's ill-fated race. The latter at one time last spring had almost made up his mind to run for the Senate—to which all agree now he would have been elected—but decided instead to seek another term at the urging of the Curran-Ennis leaders.

Resentment Expressed.

This faction's leaders told the Governor that if he ran for the Senate the way would be cleared for Mayor Jackson to be the party's nominee for Governor, and that in gratitude for all they had done for Mr. Ritchie he should prevent such an eventuality. Among Gov. Ritchie's close friends some resentment was expressed yesterday that after getting him into the fifth term race, these leaders failed to produce a sufficient majority in the city to offset Republican county gains.

Fuel was added to the Jackson-Curran-Ennis feud, perhaps unwittingly, yesterday by James A. Farley, speaking as Democratic national committee chairman. He said that one of the reasons for Gov. Ritchie's defeat was that things Mayor Jackson had said about him last summer were used against him in the last campaign.

Mr. Farley cited this as a factor in the Ritchie defeat, while denying that the defeat had any significance so far as the Roosevelt Administration or the national party were concerned. Other factors cited by him were that Gov. Ritchie had run too many times, that some Roosevelt followers felt Gov. Ritchie had not gone all the way in embracing the "New Deal," and the resentment on the Eastern Shore over the Governor's action in the Princess Anne lynching.

Returning to the Baltimore situation, Messrs. Curran and Ennis have not been enthusiastic over Senator Tydings, who has made his Federal appointments in Baltimore on recommendation of Gilbert A. Daily, collector of customs. Thus it is assumed Mayor Jackson will attempt to forge an alliance with Senator Tydings.

Between You and Me

Democrats' Widest Smirk Is Over the Handling of Letter to Sinclair.

By Raymond Clapper

WHAT do you suppose the Democratic high command regard as its smartest piece of footwork in this election campaign?

The answer is its handling of the Farley letter indorsing Upton Sinclair. That was a boner which was converted—so the Democratic management thinks—into profit.

The original letter was a slip and a bad one. It got into the mail as one of a series of form letters. The Administration had turned sour on Sinclair before the letter went out but hesitated to repudiate publicly a candidate running on the Democratic ticket. When the Sinclair people published the Farley letter, the Administration sat tight and refused to deny or confirm its authenticity. Privately it put out the word that the letter was a clerical slip. In a twinklnig the news went all over California that the Administration was not, as had been supposed, for Sinclair.

Thus the Administration was able to get its position across to the voters without sticking out its neck.

Senator David A. Reed was defeated for reelection by his secretary, Theodore Huntley, will get a new hat and a pair of shoes out of it—and from Henry P. Fletcher, Republican National chairman, at that.

The pay-off comes about this way. Recently Emil Hurja, assistant to Democratic Chairman Farley, bet Huntley a hat and a pair of shoes that Guffey would carry Pennsylvania by 200,000. A few days later Hurja met Chairman Fletcher at the Upton Sinclair luncheon here and bet him a hat and a pair of shoes that Guffey would win.

Hurja lost his bet to Huntley but won from Fletcher. He notified Fletcher to deliver the hat and shoes to Huntley, who will provide his own shirt and trousers.

* * * *

Senator-elect Guffey, of Pennsylvania, pronounces his name to rhyme with huff and puff, not "goofey" as some Republicans are saying it.

* * * *

* * * *

New political records in Pennsylvania: First Democratic Senator since 1875; first Democratic Governor since 1890; first Democratic House in State Legislature since Civil War; first Democratic majority in congressional delegation since Civil War; first time Philadelphia has had three Democratic Representatives at once.

Democratic National Chairman Farley is pleased at the prospect of one impending increase in the number of unemployed.

"Gov. Pinchot will be out of a job January 1," Farley was reminded yesterday.

"That's great," Farley replied.

Pinchot went on the Administration blacklist when he announced that he "couldn't stand for Joe Guffey."

One New Dealer's comment on Republican Chairman Fletcher's election-eve prediction that the Republicans would gain 60 to 70 seats in the House:

"He is often wrong but never in doubt."

* * * *

Republicans envy the Democrats for having Franklin D. Roosevelt. They think it must be great to have some one's coat tails to ride through on. Everybody was invoking Roosevelt's magic name to get elected. Even Merriam, the Republican candidate for Governor in California, insisted that a vote for him was a vote for Roosevelt. Having no Roosevelt of their own, Republicans in many instances were reduced to leaning on the Democratic Roosevelt.

The hypnotic effect of that name in American politics is striking. As one who is desperately ill dwells over happy scenes of his childhood, so the Republicans, in their bitter hour seek refuge in their memories, and it is their own Roosevelt—Theodore the First—who rides gallantly into their reveries. His name is recalled in public statements by Republicans like Borah who are urging reorganization of the party. They think back upon what a different history the party might have had if it had accepted T. R.

But the party turned down the right-hand path and coasted in glory for a long time. Now it is at the bottom of the hill smashed and bleeding, and it calls for Theodore Roosevelt. It was Theodore Roosevelt who came nearest to dominating the party with the progressive spirit which a large element feels must be recaptured now.

The two fifth cousins, one in the White House, the other whose spirit comes leaping back across a dark chasm, may in a sense be regarded as the two great political forces of the moment.

* * * *

Another difficulty of the Republicans is that they will have only 24 or 25 members in the Senate, whereas there are 33 standing committees in that body, and there won't be enough Republican Senators to go around.

* * * *

Jim Farley is a hard man to satisfy. He no more than finished off this election with a record-breaking triumph than he set to work to expand the Democratic Party's power in New York State. He has a plan for redistricting up-State New York to give the cities greater proportionate strength in the Legislature. Democrats always have contended that Republican New York had greater power at Albany than its relative population justified. Democrats in up-State cities will have a bigger finger in the pie after Farley gets through.

ing with a smile that seemed to reach not only from ear to ear, but up over the top of his bald head.

He stuck his lead pencil behind his ear and leaned back in the deep-cushioned chair of the Postmaster General's office, which has seen him but little of late.

"What are you going to do about giving all these new Democrats jobs?" was the first question put by the reporters, who were in a mood apparently to give the beaming national chairman a little friendly hazing.

"Oh, we'll see that everybody who deserves to be taken care of is taken care of," Farley answered.

"Plenty."

"How much did it cost you to win this election?"

"The national committee sent less than $15,000 to State organizations," Farley replied.

"How much Federal relief money did you spend in the campaign?"

Out of Order.

Question laughted off as out of order.

"Anyway, we had a good campaign. It was lots of fun and very cheap," Farley said.

"What was the trouble in New Mexico?" a reporter asked referring to the Cutting-Chavez race.

"The other side spent too much dough, I guess," Farley answered.

Farley took occasion to dash cold water on the presidential boom for Senator Vandenberg, Republican Senator, who was reelected in Michigan.

"We would have beaten him if it had not been the bitter Democratic primary fight we had there," Farley said. "Vandenberg hasn't much to crow over. His majority was cut down from 600,000 to 75,000."

He said President Roosevelt would have opposition in 1936, "but it won't amount to anything."

"The Republicans will have trouble finding a man to make the sacrifice. Vandenberg is too smart," Farley said.

"The Republican Party is through. It is through because the people are through with the kind of leadership they have had from the Republican Party. It will be a long time before the people regain confidence in it."

Says Reed Is Through.

"Do you think there will be a realignment of parties?" Farley was asked.

"We're satisfied with ours as it is," he replied. "We'll let the other fellows worry about theirs."

"What about Senator Reed, will he come back?"

"He's on the shelf for good," Farley said.

He said Democratic victories were an indorsement of the Roosevelt Administration. Defeats like Ritchie's in Maryland he attributed to local troubles, and refused to admit they were a reflection on the National Administration.

"Practically every outstanding opponent of the New Deal who went around the country making speeches was defeated," Farley continued.

The Democratic chairman did not subscribe to the theory that the new Congress will be dominated by wild men.

"I don't think the President will have any trouble with Congress," he said. "Practically all of the winning candidates ran on a platform of supporting the President. Most of the new Senators are sensible men."

"What do you think of our victory?" Farley asked the reporters.

No Alibis Now.

"It's good," one replied, "because it fixes upon you the sole responsibility for good government. You haven't got any alibis. Do you think you are equal to that responsibility?"

"Positively," the chairman answered.

One short reporter pushed up to Farley's desk.

"Now that you are back at the Post Office Department," he said, "I got a complaint. Your mail service is lousy."

Meanwhile Republicans, pushed further out into the cold than ever, were beginning to weigh the future.

Senator Vandenberg, flushed with a reelection victory that puts him in the Presidential sweepstakes, said at Grand Rapids, Mich., that the Republican Party would return to power with liberal Republicanism in the true Lincoln tradition. He said the problem was to separate the good from the bad in the President's program, save and expand the good and condemn the bad.

Senator Borah said the Republican Party under Theodore Roosevelt was liberal and that this was the only kind of a party that could live.

Earlier Representative Hamilton Fish, New York Republican, who was reelected, demanded more human and liberal policies.

Governor-elect Nice of Maryland, a Republican, campaigned as one who professed to be closer to the New Deal in spirit than Ritchie, the Democratic Governor, whom he defeated. His victory entitles him to a place in the party's counsels in considering reorganization. Likewise Governors-elect Hoffman of New Jersey and Fitzgerald of Michigan, both of whom sent Democratic incumbents to defeat, also enter the picture, as does Landon of Kansas, who was reelected on a Republican platform friendly to the National Administration.

Party Leaders See Vote Precluding Cuts in Expenditures.

Jones, chairman of the RFC, who declared that his organization will need no further funds from Congress, and John H. Fahey, chairman of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The latter was hopeful, but not certain, that his huge lending agency can get by without more authorizations.

Partly because the RFC has been receiving, until recent weeks, more from repayments than it has been disbursing in new loans, Mr. Jones was able to proclaim, with some satisfaction, his organization's independence. Asked if some part of the huge resources of the RFC might not be diverted to other channels, Mr. Jones pointed out the President has at his disposal $500,000,000 which he can apply to relief.

"But even if he takes the $500,000,000," airily declared the RFC chairman, "we will get along all right with what we have."

Almost equally optimistic, Mr. Fahey was cautious. He expressed the opinion it is "still too early to say" whether the Administration will have to ask Congress to expand the lending capacity of the Home Owners Loan Corporation, but that indications are its $3,000,000,000 will be sufficient.

Citing a decline of nearly 77 per cent in the number of loan applications since the peak last March, the HOLC chief remarked, "It all depends on what transpires in the next three months."

Trend Downward.

He compared the March figure of 168,273 loan applications with the September figure of 37,145, and added that the trend is still downward. The HOLC, he said, has disbursed $1,875,000,000, representing 650,000 loans, leaving it more than $1,000,000,000 to carry on through next spring.

The question, he said, is whether enough relief for home owners will not have been dispensed by then to warrant turning the task over to private institutions. He pointed out that 90 per cent of HOLC loans have found their way to private lending institutions, thus strengthening their position to take up as the HOLC tapers off.

In addition to these visitors, more or less concerned with next year's budget, the President conferred separately with Representative James P. Buchanan, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee; Secretary Ickes, the public works administrator, and Senator Robert M. La Follette, Wisconsin Progressive, who has long championed a large public works program.

He also presided at a meeting of the Industrial Emergency Committee, coordinating agency of the New Deal headed by Donald R. Richberg.

Appropriation Plans.

With Buchanan, the President mapped plans for getting the annual appropriations bills out of the way before other committees report their legislative programs. No figures were discussed, the Texas Representative said, adding that he would call his committee together early in December to receive the Budget Bureau's "regular" departmental estimates.

These will not include allowances for "emergency" expenditures, which probably will be presented later in the year as part of the usual deficiency bill. But even in the regular estimates, covering only expenditures for the old-line Government departments, a generous jump in appropriations is predicted.

Observers point out that in succeeding economy bills, departmental expenses have been cut to the bone. Expansion, rather than retrenchment, will be the rule. Rising costs of equipment, restored salaries and new functions undertaken by the departments—all are cited as material items in the expected increase.

Despite this prospect, the budget is expected to be balanced approximately as to the so-called normal expenditures. It is the "emergency" outlays, principally those for relief, that so far have represented the difference between income to the Treasury and outgo.

In predicting an enlargement of the deficit for next year, more conservative House leaders express concern over the ultimate time for settlement they all know is coming. The national debt is mounting to such proportions, they feel, that it can be retired only by a liberal increase in taxation.

To Await Recovery.

This problem will not be an issue in the next Congress, they believe, except as it concerns extending present levies that expire this year. According to present indications, the whole question will be put off to such time as business has recovered sufficiently to face it.

Most serious of the problems confronting Mr. Roosevelt in the preparation of the budget is the conversion of the Government's activities from direct relief to work relief, part of which would be self liquidating. Yesterday was the anniversary of the CWA, which spent $805,000,000 in its short existence. Relief expenditures since July 1 approximate $536,000,000, with only about $320,000,000 left from present allocations to carry on until Congress meets in January.

Iowans Give Up Search For 'Baby Face' Nelson

Cresco, Iowa, Nov. 8 (AP).—Peace officers from several counties in northern Iowa tonight abandoned their search for George "Baby Face" Nelson after surrounding the town with machine guns and rifles.

Their foray into the Iowa countryside had come on the word of a captured bank robber, who asserted he had an appointment to meet the uncaptured Dillinger gangster here this afternoon.

BRONSON CUTTING.

Fate of Cutting Still Unsettled

Unreported Votes Awaited as Senator Leads by Narrow Margin.

Santa Fe, N. Mex., Nov. 8 (AP).—The winner of New Mexico's senatorial contest between Senator Bronson Cutting, Independent Republican, and Dennis Chavez, Democrat, may be decided by a few blocks of unreported ballots in two counties, absentee votes, and on scattered small precincts throughout the State.

Returns from 667 of the 785 precincts in the State gave Cutting 67,791 votes to 66,697 for Chavez.

In Rio Arriba County an estimated 8,000 votes in 25 precincts were unreported. In the other county only four precincts had been reported out of 25.

Even with these precincts reported, it was believed the official canvass would be necessary to decide the race, absentee ballots will be counted Saturday.

All other major Democratic candidates, including Senator Carl Hatch, were successful.

La Follette Sees New Party Set-up

kota, and even Senator Bronson Cutting, who had the fight of his life in New Mexico, likewise may have some ideas on the subject.

Leaves for Chicago.

"Since the beginning of this economic crisis," La Follette told reporters yesterday, "I have said I felt certain it was of such a fundamental nature that it was bound to produce a political realignment in this country, just as the fundamental crisis of human slavery produced a political realignment prior to the Civil War."

The Wisconsin Senator left immediately for Chicago to begin a six weeks' lecture tour of the country. He will speak in Michigan, Massachusetts, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York and Georgia.

"I am going to talk about economics, not politics," he said, but added, "Politics is economics in action."

He had a reason to be happy. Election vagaries that turned out of office so many of his former Republican colleagues, reelected him to the Senate by a huge majority, sent seven candidates bearing his third party banner to the House, and placed his brother, Phil La Follette, in the Wisconsin Governor's chair.

Results were the more gratifying to Bob and Phil, coming at a time when the reputation built by their famous father was seemingly on the wane. Phil was defeated for the Governorship in the 1932 Roosevelt landslide. Bob had to battle Democratic popularity and a Republican schism in his last campaign.

"Significant Victory."

"I think the victory of the Progressive Party, six months after it was organized in Wisconsin, is significant," the Senator told White House reporters.

"It gives a practical demonstration of what many have contended theoretically, namely, that a new party with a sound but fundamental and far-reaching program to meet the issues created by this economic crisis, draws its support from the farmers, wage earners, individual business and professional men for the simple reason that their economic interests in this crisis are the same."

Whether this was the burden of his luncheon converstaion with the President, Senator La Follette declined to say.

He did say "many things were discussed" and the President agreed on "most things."

9 Commandments Adopted by Head Of 'German Faith'

Berlin, Nov. 8 (U.P.).—Prof. Jacob Wilhelm Hauer, leader of the Anti-Christian "German faith" movement, today announced adoption of a new "Nine Commandments" destined to supplant the Biblican Ten Commandments in the group's ethical teachings.

Dr. Hauer omits the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." His commandments follow:

1. Honor the diety.
2. Honor ancestors and posterity.
3. Honor the great of thy people.
4. Honor they father and mother.
5. Keep thyself pure.
6. Be faithful to thy people.
7. Steal not.
8. Be truthful.
9. Be helpful to the noble.

The last was regarded as a paraphrase of the commandment on brotherly love.

Change or Die, Borah's Advice To Republicans

Needn't Give Up Name of Party, Declares Idaho Senator.

Chicago, Nov. 8 (AP).—Senator William E. Borah (Republican), Idaho, today prescribed an overhauling of the Republican Party to save it from political death.

"I should like to see the Republican Party reorganized," he said, "and I believe it can be done and should be done and, further, that if it isn't done, the Republican Party will die like the old Whig Party, where it showed political cowardice."

He examined the wounds his party had suffered in Tuesday's election and observed:

"It will have to be resuscitated. I don't think there is any room in this country for an old conservative party. If the Republican Party is reorganized, it will take a more liberal course. If not, it won't.

"There is no reason to give up the name, principles and teachings of the party. Abraham Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt were liberal leaders. It doesn't take very long to shake-off what you call conservatism."

The Senator indicated he did not believe the new and successful Progressive Party in Wisconsin was the instrument for the transition.

Borah found it "difficult" to say anything about what changes in leadership might come in the wake of the Democratic landslide, but it was suggested he might be a likely candidate.

"I am interested in the issues before the country," he explained, "but I am not assuming to take the leadership. I haven't seen any demonstration along that line."

Commons Warned Government Bars Inquiry on Arms

London, Nov. 8 (AP).—Sir John Simon, foreign secretary, made it clear today in the House of Commons the British government will not permit an inquiry after the fashion of the recent United States Senate committee's investigation into armaments.

Both Labor and Liberal speakers urged such an inquiry, but Sir John said methods used in the United States "would not commend themselves to British practice."

The debate centered around a Labor resolution demanding abolition of the private manufacture and trade in armaments, and a British provision for state production of such armaments "as considered necessary."

Simon was cheered as he mentioned a telegram produced during the Washington hearing "which was read as though it were evidence asserting no less a person than his majesty the King had sent for the Polish Ambassador and impressed upon him the importance of purchasing whatever he wanted from an English firm. Of course, that is perfectly and entirely ridiculous. All of us, to whatever party we belong, know his majesty to be perfectly incapable of having any connection with this silly story."

Academy of Letters Picks Lippmann, Gay

New York, Nov. 8 (AP).—Walter Lippmann, writer and publicist, and Walter Gay, American artist living in Paris, today were elected members of the American Academy of Arts and Letters.

Fleet Returns to Base After 7-Months Cruise

Los Angeles, Nov. 8 (AP).—The United States Fleet, with its complement of 20,000 officers and men, will return to its home port, Los Angeles Harbor, tomorrow after an absence of seven months.

While the guns of Fort McArthur boom a salute, the flagship pro-tem, New Mexico, with Admiral Joseph M. Reeves, commander-in-chief, aboard, is scheduled to drop anchor off San Pedro at 9 a. m.

Permanent Fair Is Urged.

Chicago, Nov. 8 (AP).—A permanent world's fair on Chicago's lakefront was the aim of Alderman John J. Coughlin today. He will introduce a resolution to the city council authorizing collection of a $2,500,000 fund to finance purchase of the buildings and equipment of A Century of Progress.

Two U.S. Warships Change Command

Ravenscroft to Detroit, Baum to Arizona.

Changes of command of two vessels of the fleet, the Arizona and the Detroit, were included in orders issued at the Navy Department yesterday.

Flagship of Battleship Division 2 of the battle force, the Arizona, will be commanded by Capt. George M. Baum, U. S. N., now on duty at the naval operating base at San Francisco. Capt. Baum will relieve Capt. Macgillivray Milne, who has been ordered to duty as inspector of ordnance in charge of the depot at Lake Denmark, N. J.

Capt. George M. Ravenscroft, U. S. N., will take command of the Detroit, which is flagship of the destroyers of the battle force. He will relieve Capt. Roland M. Brainard, U. S. N., who has been ordered to duty in the Bureau of Ordnance at the Navy Department. Capt. Ravenscroft has been in charge of the naval ammunition depot at Lake Denmark.

Stoll Kidnaping Suspect Fights Removal Order

Judge Refuses to Issue Habeas Corpus Writ for Robinson.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 8 (AP).—Ordered to Louisville for trial in connection with the Alice Speed Stoll kidnaping, Thomas H. Robinson, sr., remained in Nashville tonight while his attorneys prepared to carry their fight against removal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Cincinnati. Bond was fixed at $25,000.

An appeal from the United States District Court's decision was made possible by Federal Judge Harry B. Anderson, who ordered Robinson's removal. Judge Anderson held that defense counsel could file a plea for a writ of habeas corpus, but declined to grant the writ himself. This action, prosecution counsel said, entitled Robinson to appeal from the decision refusing the habeas corpus writ.

Interrupting an extended reading of evidence submitted at an earlier hearing at which United States Commissioner Julian Campbell had ordered Robinson freed, Judge Anderson, tracing Robinson's testimony before Commissioner Campbell, cited "suspicious circumstances" in connection with the evidence and said "it is clear that there can be but one order in this case."

This order, he declared, "is that there is probable cause to believe him (Robinson, sr.) guilty."

Robinson, a 61-year-old engineer and father of Thomas H. Robinson, jr., accused as the actual kidnaper of Mrs. Stoll, was indicted by a Federal grand jury at Louisville on charges of aiding and conspiring to perpetrate the abduction.

Saying that most of the contentions raised by the defense "are questions of fact," Judge Anderson added that "these are not questions for me to decide—they are questions for a jury."

Helm of France Taken by Flandin

Drops Disputed Points.

First he dropped the two points of the Doumergue program that caused the venerable premier's overthrow.

He consented not to press for dissolution of the Chamber of Deputies, nor for the granting of three months credits for the government.

Those were the issues that led Edouard Herriot and his five radical socialist fellow ministers to give Doumergue their resignations, and Flandin's move brought the radical socialists rallying to his support.

Meanwhile, Paris was plastered with copies of the retiring premier's plea for "calm."

It read:

"I have been led to abandon power. I beg all my fellow citizens, in behalf of the interest and security of the fatherland, to maintain the calm necessary to the settlement of the present difficulties."

The former president would not consider remaining as premier with only minority support, he said, because he might be accused of dictatorship.

Opinion of Regime.

While most political leaders expressed the greatest anxiety over Doumergue's departure, many members of Parliament said privately he had not entirely succeeded.

In his defense, friends pointed out that when he came to power from retirement, February 18, he found exactly 1,000,000 francs in the treasury and 700,000,000 to be paid that night.

He arranged to borrow 800,000,000 francs from bankers within a few hours, and saved the government's credit.

In contrast, his friends argued, is the present state of the French treasury—2,800,000,000 francs in cash on hand and bonds in the amount of several billion francs refunded.

Flandin assured himself of the tolerance, if not the support of the powerfully organized veterans by retaining Gen. Victor Denain, Doumergue's minister of air, and by getting pledge of support from Marshal Henri Petain, resigned minister of war.

Former Premier Andre Tardieu, minister without portfolio under Doumergue, declined to enter Flandin's ministry, but Herriot agreed to take over the education or some similar portfolio, not insisting on an important place.

Jurors to Renew Paul Bern Inquiry

Miss Harlow, in announcing her plans to seek a divorce from Rosson, movie cameraman, blamed temperament for her final breakup with Rosson, whom she married last year in Yuma after an elopement.

"Hal is a grand person," she said today, "but we simply were not suited to each other."

Rosson, taken ill with infantile paralysis shortly after his separation last May from Jean, is now in Europe. His estranged wife said she had not heard from him since he sailed from New York.

Friends of the film star said they knew of no plans she had to remarry, and added they did not think there was any possibility of a marriage to William Powell, former husband of Carole Lombard. Miss Harlow and Powell have attended many social and sporting events together.

Jean, born Harlean Carpenter in Kansas City, was divorced from her first first husband, Charles McGrew, in 1927.

Wetmore, 71, Retires on Nov. 30, After 49 Years in U. S. Service

'Supervising Architect' of Treasury Was Never an Architect.

An architect but not an architect, well known and yet obscure, one of Washington's most interesting personalities will retire from public life, November 30, with a unique service record.

He is James A. Wetmore, 71 years old tomorrow and a 49-year veteran in the Federal Government. Before becoming chairman of the Treasury's Board of Review, procurement division, last February, he was acting supervising architect almost 19 years.

You've probably never heard much of James A. Wetmore (the "A." stands for Alphonso) although his name appears on more public buildings all over the country than any one else's. He's the fellow who twice declined the office of supervising architect of the Treasury which paid a salary twice the amount he was getting, and continued in his "acting," capacity.

Never and Architect.

He is the Bath (N. Y.) native who came to Washington in 1885 to take a $1,400 Government job and study law in his spare time and wound up in the highest architectural position Uncle Sam can bestow—although he never was, nor is he now, an architect.

With a half century of accomplishment behind him, the last few years of which encompassed America's greatest building program, Mr. Wetmore is now taking things easy while waiting for his retirement to go into effect officially.

"I'm going to find out what it's like to take a rest."

That's what he had to say last night, relaxed in an overstuffed chair in his apartment at 2151 California street, northwest. He hasn't said much more than that, for publication, since taking over the office of supervising architect in 1915.

Mr. Wetmore was a court reporter in Hornell, N. Y., when he accepted an offer of a stenographic job in the Treasury Department in 1885. Promotions came fast, and in 1896 he was made chief of the law and records division of the supervising architect's office. Georgetown University gave him a bachelor of laws degree the same year.

Fills in 'Awhile.'

Long before 1915, the year Oscar Wenderoth resigned as supervising architect, Mr. Wetmore had been admitted to the District bar but he was destined never to practice his chosen profession. When Wenderoth stepped down, his right hand man was told to fill in "for a while."

"For a while" developed into the period between June, 1915, and February, 1934. Mr. Wetmore, however, dumfounded William Gibbs McAdoo, when he was Secretary of the Treasury, by twice rejecting formal appointment and the salary provided for the supervising architect of the department.

Reason: He was fearful lest the naming of a nonarchitect to the office cast a bad reflection on both the Administration and the profession.

Eventually, though, he accepted the proffered pay increase, but steadfastly refused to drop the "acting" before his title.

Following passage of the public buildings act in 1926, he assumed administrative charge of the gigantic program which has given Washington its $100,000,000 Triangle group and other new structures. That's why his name is inscribed on every building in the Triangle. It is also impressed in the corner stones of some 2,000 others from coast to coast. (Look for the "acting" in the inscription).

But of them all he is proudest of the new postoffice in Bath, where he was born. He went up to help lay the corner stone in 1931. The trowel, appropriately engraved, hangs over the apartment fireplace.

He succeeded in keeping in the background of the Capital's swirl of events while being, besides chief of the Government's building construction branch, a member of the o the Manor Club, a painter with Public Buildings Commission, an intensely active Mason, a member several meritorious canvases to his credit and an accomplished linguist.

Next Monday night his associates are honoring Mr. Wetmore with a farewell dinner at the Hotel Carlton, and soon afterward he and Mrs. Wetmore will be leaving Washington to make their permanent home in Coral Gables, Fla.

He will also be leaving Louis A. Simon, the incumbent, and succeeding supervising architects a length-of-service record to shoot at. For, though never an architect (he did not even apply for the job), Mr. Wetmore filled the office for a longer period than any of his predecessors since the position was created.

And during all that time, if anyone is interested, he never took so much as a cigar from a contractor.

"Recently I had to send back a gallon can of New Orleans molasses, that was a gift from a builder," he said last night.

"Good molasses, too."

Democrats Win Four-Fifths of Major Offices

(Associated Press.)

Tuesday's Democratic victory, so overwhelming as to give the party, roughly, four-fifths of the major electoral offices in the country, late yesterday left the standing:

Governors—Democrats, 38; Republicans, 8; Farmer-Labor, 1; Progressive, 1.

Out of a popular vote of 28,400,000, the Democrats had 15,300,000. Eliminating the votes that went for the minor parties, the Democrats had better than a 3,000,000-vote edge over the Republicans.

Thirty of the 48 States gave the Democrats virtually complete command of all major elective offices—Senate, House and Governorships. Eighteen States turned over all these offices to the Democrats. In twelve others, the Republicans managed to hold only one, or at most two, of these offices against the New Deal buffetings. In several of these latter, the men who held the seats were as likely to vote with the Democrats as to follow the G. O. P. elephant.

The Republicans had managed to retain complete control of all major elective offices in only two States—Delaware and Vermont.

Democrats drove Republicans from a senatorial and gubernatorial chair in the cherished Republican citadel of Pennsylvania. Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Maryland, Missouri Democrats counted Senate gains.

In the House, Democrats ousted Republican Representatives in 27 districts. Republicans won 17 Democratic and two Farmer Labor seats.

Only 12 Out of 50 Succeed In Making House Comeback

Even Those Veterans Who Win Find Going Rough.

(Associated Press.)

The old comeback trail proved steep for a half hundred former House members who sought election.

Only 12 made the grade, and it was rough going even for them.

Some of the victorious carried better-known names, like Earl C. Michener, a Michigan Republican. Back in 1926 he led in an attempt to impeach Federal Judge George W. English, of Illinois. English resigned and the impeachment case was dropped.

Then there is Melvin J. Maas, a Minnesota Republican. Once a man stood up in the House gallery and threatened members on the floor with a pistol. Many scattered or slid under desks, but Maas boldly walked to the disturber and ordered him to drop the pistol. He did.

A third comeback is Republican Dewey Short, of Missouri. He once was the "baby member" of the House. Progressive George J. Schneider, coming back from Wisconsin, used to be a Republican.

Democrat James McAndrews, returning from Illinois, illustrates the reward of perseverance. He served in six Congresses—12 years—before he was defeated in 1920. Two years ago he ran against Fred Britten, Republican, and was defeated narrowly. Now he has whipped Britten.

Some of the unsuccessful also were well known, as the big, strong-voiced Republican John C. Schafer, of Wisconsin, once a railroad engineer. When he was in the House, members came to expect that every time Representative Blanton (Democrat), Texas, then a dry, got to his feet, Schafer, a wet, would start a friendly but biting exchange of sarcasm with the Texan.

Republican Burnett M. Chiperfield, of Illinois, also found himself in the ranks of the shut-outs. Every year, on the anniversary of Lincoln's birthday, Chiperfield used to don a swallow-tail and wing collar and make a speech about the Emancipator.

Opequon Memorial To Install Mr. Jones

Winchester, Nov. 8 (Spl.).—The Rev. Allen Jones next Sunday will be installed as pastor of the Opequon Memorial Church at Kernstown, three miles south of this city on the Lee-Jackson highway. The Rev. Robert B. Campbell will preach the installation sermon and Dr. Charles D. Gilkeson will preside.

Mr. Jones recently accepted a call to the Kernstown church and he also will serve Burnt Church, the church at Albin and Round Hill Presbyterian Church at Chambersville. The Rev. J. M. Carr, of Berryville, will preach at the installation service at Chambersville Sunday evening.

Special Session Urged To Aid Virginia Needy

Petersburg, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—The city council went on record yesterday favoring a special session of the State Legislature to appropriate funds to match the Government's appropriations to care for the needy.

Resolutions asking that the session be called were sent to State Senator Robert Gilliam and Samuel D. Rodgers, member of the House of Delegates from Petersburg. Petersburg now has 1,227 families, consisting of about 5,000 persons on relief. It is feared that unless Virginia matches the Federal funds the Government will cut off its appropriation by February 1.

Minnesotan Wins Corn-Husking Race

Fairmont, Minn., Nov. 8 (U.P.).—Ted Balko, Minnesota State champion, today won the national corn husking championship against representatives of nine States. A record crowd of 70,000 saw the contest.

Balko husked 25.786 bushels, considerably short of the record of 36.9 bushels set in 1932 by Carl Seilig, of Illinois. Richard Anderson, of Brandon, S. Dak., was second with 22.919 bushels, and Harry Brown, of Beemer, Nebr., third with 22.916 bushels.

Paralyzed Blind Man Sentenced to Prison

Los Angeles, Nov. 8 (AP).—Gray E. McNeer, 34, paralyzed and blinded by a bullet imbedded in his brain, was convicted of second-degree murder by a jury today. The conviction carried a sentence of 10 years to life.

The State charged McNeer shot and killed his estranged wife, Betty, 29, and then fired a bullet into his own head in a suicide attempt. McNeer asserted he was shot by his wife, who then killed herself.

Film Projector That Shows Speed of Thought Described

Time Is Measured From Perception of Idea to Spoken Form.

Iowa City, Nov. 8 (AP).—The speed of thought is shown by a new motion picture machine at the University of Iowa psychological laboratory, described tonight in Science by Joseph Tiffin.

Ideas evidently take a fair fraction of a second to form in the mind. This time is shown by a talkie film which pegs the time when the eyes see and idea on a printed page and the delay until the voice sounds in reading that idea aloud.

The film records more than merely the time when an idea starts for the mind and when it reissues as sound. It shows the eyes stopping on each idea. They come to a complete stop for each word or group of words they look at.

The camera shows them clearly moving ahead in a series of quick jerks. They keep from one to three of these intervals ahead of what the voice is saying. The delay between the ideas they stop to look at and the same words spoken by the reading voice is a full second.

Part of this delay is mechanical—the time it takes the eyes to "see" and the nerves and muscles to translate the minds orders into vocal sounds.

But science has evidence that the "seeing" time, that is the time for transmission of an idea from eye to mind, is exceedingly fast. Dr. Robert B. W. Hutt, of Trinity College, and others have shown that the brain can grasp a single number in about a thousandth part of a second.

$1,460 of Cash Paid to Release Urschel Found

Discovered at House in Oregon Occupied by Suspects.

Medford, Oreg., Nov. 8 (U.P.). Federal agents searching the residence and grounds occupied by two suspects in the Charles F. Urschel kidnaping case today found additional ransom money and a secret, sound-proof room.

Authorities saw possibility that an Oregon or California kidnaping was frustrated by rarest of Roseburg, Oreg., of A. H. Scott and Margaret Huritienne.

Miss Hurtienne, described by officers as Scott's "housekeeper," rented the Medford dwelling last June.

Miss Hurtienne is said to be a sister of Clara Feldman, who claimed to be the wife of Albert Bates, one of George (Machine Gun) eKlly's gang, who is serving a life sentence in Alcatraz Prison for kidnaping the Oklahoma oil millionaire.

Department of Justice agents searching the outbuildings of the Medford House found $1,460 in currency, all in $20 bills such as were paid by Urschell when he bought his release for $250,000. They found also $4,000 in drafts on a Denver, Colo., bank, payable to Clara Feldman.

Scott lies critically injured with a fractured skull in a Roseburg hospital. When he was taken from the wreck of his automobile near Roseburg last Friday, officers found $1,350 in Urschel ransom bills in his wallet. Miss Hurtienne was arrested when she came to his bed side.

Sheriff Is Shot; Man Kills Self

Objected to Division of Property With His Estranged Wife.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 8 (AP).—James McGraw, 28, of Emmittsburg, died here tonight several hours after he had shot himself and Deputy Sheriff William Forman, 53, at the McGraw home. Forman's condition is critical.

The shooting occurred while Forman was dividing the personal property of McGraw and his wife, from whom he was separated. The McGraws lived on property of the St. Joseph's College, where McGraw worked.

Frederick County officers said the three were in the cellar, dividing canned goods. McGraw, it was understood, objected to the division of the property and shot Forman in the forehead and jaw.

Mrs. McGraw ran from the cellar and into the yard. McGraw followed, then shot himself in the head. Forman staggered from the house and Beamon Poole, Thurmont, driver of Forman's automobile, brought both men to a hospital here.

Elections Found Regular, If Not All 'Lily White'

If there were any irregularities in Tuesday's elections, the Department of Justice has yet to find out about them, according to the Associated Press.

Attorney General Cummings said yesterday that department investigators had been stationed in Philadelphia and Chicago in anticipation of irregularities, but that nothing of that sort had been reported by them.

Although no complaints have yet arrived Cummings said this did not indicate that the election was "lily white."

Dawes Defends Banker Named In Insull Case

Former Vice President Testifies to Character of Harold Stuart.

Chicago, Nov. 8 (AP).—Gen. Charles G. Dawes, vice president of the United States in the Collidge Administration, and six other Chicagoans took the witness stand in the Insull mail fraud trial today to swear to the high character of four men indicted with Samuel Insull, former Chicago utilities executive.

Their appearance underlined the social and business standing of the defendants gathered around the table with Insull and accused of joining in a $100,000,000 stock swindle. Chiefly the character witnesses knew the defendants socially, as neighbors in one or another of Chicago's swankier suburbs.

Gen. Dawes testified for Harold L. Stuart, president of Halsey, Stuart and Co., La Salle street investment banking house.

He had known Stuart for 30 years, Dawes said in a gruff voice, and knew Stuart's reputation to be "of the highest."

Brig. Gen. John V. Clinnin testified for Clarence T. MacNeille, an official both of Halsey Stuart & Co. and of Insull's Corporation Securities Co., under fire in the mail fraud case. Gen. Clinnin, who commanded the 130th Infantry during the war, said MacNeille's reputation, prior to his indictment in this case, was "very good."

A third prominent Chicagoan to say a good word for Stuart was Sewell Avery, president of Montgomery Ward & Co. and the United States Gypsum Co. Stuart's reputation "for honesty and as a law-abiding citizen" he called "extremely high."

Col. Frank Knox, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, called Stuart's reputation "excellent." He said John J. O'Keefe, youngest of the 16 defendants, is now in his employ.

$30,000,000 Gold Slated for U. S.

Total of Movement to Reach 50 Millions.

New York, Nov. 8 (AP).—Arrangements were made today for the shipment of $30,000,000 more gold from Europe to New York, bringing the total on the present movement to $50,000,000 or more.

Most of today's transactions were carried out in Paris, although some small consignments of Belgian and Dutch gold were engaged for American destination.

The unusual size of gold purchases today indicated to Wall Street observers that banks no longer are hesitating to take metal out of Paris. Furthermore, the fact that metal is now en route from Brussels and Amsterdam removed all suspicion that obstacles might be placed in the way of exports.

Sims and Vanderbilt Out of Bridge Tourney

New York, Nov. 8 (AP).—Belated discovery of an error in arithmetic in the keeping of scores tonight caused elimination of the P. Hal Sims-Harold S. Vanderbilt combination from the competition for the trophy Vanderbilt offers for bridge teams of four.

An obscure Brooklyn team found an error which put it back in the running and dropped the famous Sims unit into the classification of those that failed to qualify.

Liberty League Will Bolster Executive Unit

Avery, Guggenheim, Rust and Others Reported On Rolls.

New York, Nov. 8 (AP).—The American Liberty League—founded with the avowed intention to protect the Constitution and safeguard property rights—is expanding its activities by the addition to its executive committee of men prominent in the Nation's affairs, it was learned tonight.

To the committee of five—Alfred E. Smith and John W. Davis, former Democratic Presidential nominees, former Gov. Nathan L. Miller, Representative James W. Wadsworth and Irenee Du Pont—the league was reliably reported to have added the following members:

Sewell L. Avery, of Chicago, president of Montgomery Ward; Harry F. Guggenheim, of New York; Henry B. Rust, Pittsburgh industrialist; Colby Chester, president of General Foods Corporation; H. B. Earhart, of Detroit, director of the Vacuum Oil Co.; J. Howard Pew, of Philadelphia; Mrs. Henry B. Joy, of Detroit, and John J. Raskob.

Ultimately the league is expected to increase the membership of its executive committee to 25. This is in line with its program of expansion, which calls for formation of a branch in every State in the Union.

The league plans a huge mass meeting in Chicago at the end of this month. Smith and other speakers of Nation-wide prominence are expected to address this rally.

Mrs. Charles H. Sabin, formerly head of the disbanded Women's National Organization for Prohibition Reform, is to head the women's division, which is already being formed.

The league is reported to have invited Robert A. Milliken, famous California scientist, and Dr. Earnest M. Hopkins, of Dartmouth University, to become members.

It was also said that Edward F. Hutton, New York broker, will become identified with the league either as an associate of Jouett Shouse, president, or as a member of the committee.

44 Offered Chance For Jobs With FHA

Richmond, Va., Nov. 8 (AP).—Forty-four persons have been interviewed as prospective Virginia applicants for places in the appraising and field service of the new residential construction branch of the FHA, Director Robert Hunt announced today.

Those chosen will be sent to a school for approximately two weeks in Washington, beginning November 12. While there their expenses will be paid at the rate of $2,600 a year, less 5 per cent. After they have passed the course examination they will be put in the field at salaries between $3,200 and $5,200 annually.

Their jobs will be to safeguard the public and Federal Government on the FHA loans that are to be made on new residential construction under part 2 of the national housing act. The act provides that the Federal Government will guarantee loans to prospective residence buildings up to 80 per cent of the cost of the project.

Congregation to Hear 'Armistice' Address

The Rev. John C. Palmer, D. D., pastor of the Washington Heights Presbyterian Church and chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Masons, will deliver an Armistice Day address at the Washington Hebrew Congregation Temple tonight at 8 o'clock. His title will be "A Prophet's Message to a Peace-Hungry World." Special guests at the service will be Jewish veterans of the World War.

Jewish war veterans will sponsor an Armistice Day broadcast Saturday at 7:15 p. m., which will be heard from a local station. On Sunday Gov. Julius I. Meier, of Oregon, will participate in the Nation-wide memorial broadcast.

Plating Materials.

New York, Nov. 8 (AP).—Producers of plating materials are receiving a better volume of inquiry, which is taken as a forecast of increased activity in the automobile industry.

Enemy of FIDC Persists in His Nose Thumbing

'100 Per Cent' Nichols Dares Crowley to Fine Him.

Chicago, Nov. 8 (U.P.).—J. M. (100 Per Cent) Nichols, a rugged individualist if there ever were one, today reiterated a suggestion which has become with him a rather monotonous refrain.

He suggested that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation "kindly go to hell." He included Leo T. Crowley, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (hereinafter to be known as FDIC), his subordinates, and any other New Dealer who might come snooping about the premises of his First National Bank of Englewood seeking to slap a $100-a-day fine on it for refusing to join the FDIC.

Nichols, president of the bank, tells the FDIC to "go to hell" every time he hears that it is planning to crack down on him. Sometimes he says "kindly go to hell," sometimes not. It depends on how he feels. He was feeling pretty well today, because, as the days go by, he gets surer and surer that the FDIC is in no position to fine him $100 a day or to charge him one-half of 1 per cent for deposit insurance.

Nichols heard today that the FDIC was planning to take him into Federal court about it and issued his customary statement. He added:

"They're afraid to bring me into court," and the reason, he explained, is that the FDIC is unconstitutional.

"I am not saying that if they do bring me into court they won't beat me," he said, "because they might. The courts seem to be sold on the New Deal. But we would have a lot of fun and I would tell plenty. I've dared them and dared them, but they won't bring me into court. Why, a fine of $100 a day would be cheap. My bank is as sound as a dollar before Roosevelt. We don't need deposit insurance. We can pay back our depositors 100 per cent right now."

That's where he gets his nickname.

Wine Will Flow At White House

according to the Associated Press.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union long has urged First Ladies to lead American women in refusing wine.

More than 1,800 glasses, some of which served Presidents before the Civil War, have been brought out of storage for the White House guests, and a full cellar is ready to fill them with a wide variety of vintages—all of them American, according to the dictum Mrs. Roosevelt laid down when repeal went into effect.

Mrs. Roosevelt Plans.

Active and radiant, Mrs. Roosevelt was full of plans yesterday.

"It seems to have been a successful election from my point of view," was the only statement she would make on Tuesday's Democratic victory.

She discussed the District relief situation and expressed the hope that the school luncheons for needy children might be continued.

Mrs. Roosevelt said she had been considering many letters sent her on the problem of domestic service. Some pointed out the difficulty of getting domestic help, since wages for servants are very little more than relief payments, while others were from women who had been taken into homes to work for room and board and were seeking to improve their condition. The First Lady said some kind of standards with respect to hours and working conditions probably would be desirable.

Her White House housekeeping plans include the establishment of an assembly room for guests invited to luncheon or informal dinners. This necessitates the moving of the White House switchboard from its present headquarters in the basement, but Mrs. Roosevelt said she hoped the switchboard as well as the social bureau and other offices will be moved into the new executive offices by December 1.

G. O. P. Polls Big Majority in Carroll County

Republicans Elect All But One Candidate for County Office.

Westminster, Md., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—With a record ballot of 13,000, more than 80 per cent of the registered voters in Carroll County departed from usual custom Tuesday and elected all but one of the Republican candidates for county offices.

Harry Berwager, of Westminster, Democratic candidate for registrar of wills, was the exception, winning with a majority of more than 1,300 over his opponent, Harry Bushey, Republican, of Mount Airy.

The final tabulation, completed more than 29 hours after the counting began, gave Governor-elect Harry W. Nice, 3,551 majority over Ritchie.

Spirited Contests.

In several spirited contests, George Fringer, Westminster, 28-year-old member of the bar, defeated his Democratic opponent, John Wood, by 1,104 votes; Senator J. David Baile, Republican, was reelected by the scant majority of 212; and Edwin M. Mellor, jr., was reelected clerk of the court, polling a majority of 1,899 to defeat Ray Yohn, former sheriff.

Theodore F. Brown, candidate for representative, carried Carroll County by 2,118 votes, but was defeated by William P. Cole, jr., in the other sections of the Second Congressional District. Although a split in the local Democratic party prior to the primaries in September was said to have been a contributing factor, Republican party leaders here were at a loss to explain the large majorities polled by the Republican candidates in the face of a Democratic majority in registration of 636.

Vote for County Offices.

The votes for the county offices was as follows: County commissioners, Charles Melville (Republican), 7,057; Norman Hess (Republican), 6,925; E. Edward Martin (Republican), 6,733; Edward Harner (Democrat), 6,071; Howard Wine (Democrat), 5,737; George Wolbert (Democrat), 5,145. Clerk of the court: Edwin M. Mellor, jr. (Republican), 7,232; Ray Yohn (Democrat), 5,333.

State's attorney: George Fringer (Republican), 6,761; John Wood (Democrat), 5,657. State Senator: J. David Baile (Republican), 6,273; C. C. Twigg (Democrat), 6,061. House of Delegates: C. Ray Barnes (Republican), 6,750; Charles Kephart (Republican), 6,423; Melvin Routson (Republican), 6,227; Carroll Rinehart (Republican), 6,188; J. Herbert Snyder (Democrat), 5,983; Raymond Benson (Democrat), 5,805; George Mitchell (Democrat), 5,471; Howard Murdoch (Democrat), 5,167.

Sheriff: John Shipley (Republican), 7,015; Charles Conaway (Democrat), 6,024;. Judges of the Orphans' Court: Lewis Green (Republican), 6,863; J. Webster Ebaugh (Republican), 6,824; John H. Brown (Republican), 6,560; Charles Marker (Democrat), 5,982; Milton Brown Democrat), 5,455; Arnolphus Krumrine (Democrat), 4,867. County treasurer: Paul Kuhns (Republican), unopposed, 6,060.

Parade at Crisfield Acclaims Nice Election

Crisfield, Md., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—The election of Harry W. Nice, as Governor of Maryland, was celebrated in modern fashion here tonight. A parade of automobiles with horns blowing, and occupants cheering toured principal parts of the county. The parade was nearly 2 miles long. Approximately 2,000 people took part in celebration.

The effigy of Gov. Ritchie, and those of the "Big Democrat Bosses" were buried with appropriate ceremony.

WASH OUT 15 MILES OF KIDNEY TUBES

Win Back Pep . . . Vigor . . . Vitality

Medical authorities agree that your kidneys contain 15 MILES of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy.

If you have trouble with too-frequent bladder passages with scanty amount causing burning and discomfort, the 15 MILES of kidney tubes need washing out. This danger signal may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and vitality, getting up nights, lumbago, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness.

If kidneys don't empty 3 pints every day and get rid of 4 pounds of waste matter, your body will take up these poisons causing serious trouble. It may knock you out and lay you up for many months. Don't wait. Ask your druggist for DOAN'S PILLS . . . a doctor's prescription . . . which has been used successfully by millions of kidney sufferers for over 40 years. They give quick relief and will help to wash out the 15 MILES of kidney tubes.

But don't take chances with strong drugs or so-called "kidney cures" that claim to fix you up in 15 minutes, for they may seriously injure and irritate delicate tissues. Insist on DOAN'S PILLS . . . the old reliable relief that contain no "dope" or habit-forming drugs. Be sure you get DOAN'S PILLS at your druggist. © 1934, Foster-Milburn Co.

Salisbury Man Killed by Train

Salisbury, Md., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—The body of Frank Gravnor, 38, of Salisbury, was found yesterday morning beside the Baltimore & Eastern Railway right of way here.

He had been seen Tuesday night walking by the tracks.

Police believed that he lay down close to the tracks and went to sleep and that the pilot of a switch engine hit him.

Frederick Vote Awards G. O. P. Most Offices

Returns in From 56 of 57 Precincts; Official Canvass Begun.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—Returns from all of the 57 election precincts of Frederick County except one today show that Republicans captured a major part of the county offices at Tuesday's election. The election supervisors started this afternoon to canvass and the official returns, including the missing precinct, will not be known until the canvass is completed tomorrow morning. Democrats elected Judge of the Orphans Court John Hershberger to the office of register of wills by a majority exceeding 2,000. Other successful Democrats were Justice Sherman P. Bowers, elected State's attorney; Roy P. Hiltner, sheriff; Louis C. Etchison and C. Newton Thomas, judges of the Orphans Court; George E. Castle, John B. Funk and Lamar Barrick, House of Delegates. Republicans elected Thomas A. Chapline, county treasurer, Eli G. Haugh, clerk of the Circuit Court; Samuel U. Gregg, judge of the Orphans Court; Abraham H. Derr, U. Grant Hooper, and Jessie I. Renner, county commissioners; Harry W. Legore, State senator; Jacob F. Ramsburg and Joseph B. Payne, House of Delegates, and Frank Rothenhoefer, surveyor. In the unofficial returns, Legore, Republican, is leading Etchison by 149 votes. With one missing precinct, John S. Renn, Democrat, is trailing by 243 the Republican with fewest votes for county commissioner.

The missing precinct and the official canvass are not expected to make any change in the results. The plurality for Harry W. Nice, Republican candidate for Governor, has gone over the 5,000 mark against Gov. Albert C. Ritchie in this county. The missing precinct is expected to add to Nice's plurality.

Drive on Crime Opened by Bar, Citizens' Group

Noel Is Chairman, Yaden First Assistant of New Committee.

The committee sponsored by the District Bar Association as a means of combating crime in Washington yesterday began its work by changing its name.

The title of "permanent committee on criminal justice," suggested by the American Bar Association and passed along by the District Bar, was discarded for the name "citizens committee on crime."

F. Regis Noel, president of the local bar association, was elected chairman of the committee, and James G. Yaden, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations, vice president.

The committee went outside its membership of nine to select a secretary—Chester Caywood, lawyer—although it was said the job will carry no salary.

Special Studies Planned.

Subcommittees were named to make special studies of what have been termed weaknesses in the District's law enforcement system.

To Seth W. Richardson, former Assistant Attorney General, was assigned the task of investigating the probation and parole practices and laws. Both systems were criticized severely by United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett at the Mayflower Hotel mass meeting recently.

Paul Cromelin, lawyer-member, was instructed to make a separate study of the legal aspects of the indeterminate sentence law under which the District parole board operates.

Want Parole Law Changed.

Members of the Parole Board already have stated their desire to see the law amended to require convicted persons to serve half instead of a fifth of the maximum sentence imposed by the court, and it is understood the District Bar Association supports them.

Dr. A. B. Hall, of the Brookings Institution, agreed to enlist his staff in making a general study of all criminal legislation in the District with the view of offering recommendations for changes. He is director of Government research.

The question of whether the committee shall advocate legalized gambling was referred to Mrs. Merritt O. Chance, past president of the Women's City Club.

Presidents of three civic organizations were assigned to report on the inadequacy of the Police Department. They are Mr. Yaden, of the Federation of Citizens Associations; Arthur Clarendon Smith, of the Federation of Business Men's Associations, and George W. Beasley, of the Federation of Civic Associations.

These subcommittees will make progress reports at each weekly meeting and in time to permit the general committee to prepare a report for submission to the National Anticrime Conference, December 10, sponsored by the Justice Department and the American Bar Association.

Resolutions expressing satisfaction with the progress of the anti-crime crusade in the District, adopted by the Federation of Business Men's Associations, the Democratic League of the District and the Lions Club, were read at the meeting.

Cotton Acreage Slash of 25% Is Due in 1935

Increased Payments for Cooperating Farmers Are Planned.

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

A 1935 program for America's principal export crop—cotton—which calls for the largest possible acreage reduction and increased payments to cooperating farmers was drafted yesterday at the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

As yet the plan is labeled "unofficial" but authoritative quarters reported Secretary Wallace almost certainly would order an acreage cut of 25 per cent below the past average of around 41,000,000 acres.

The majority of the South's cotton growers already have signed contracts pledging reduction for 1935. Those agreements provide that the 25 per cent reduction is the maximum which may be ordered from Washington.

Only the discovery that funds would be unavailable, one official said, would prevent the increase in payments to Southren farmers who are cooperating, or who agree to do so in the future.

Deal With Germany.

At the same time, it was revealed at the Farm Administration that negotiations are under way with Germany for a deal which would involve the exchange of about 500,000 bales of cotton for German goods.

The decrease in cotton exports to Germany constitutes the principal factor in the decline in cotton shipments abroad and one of the reasons why AAA officials feel that the maximum acreage reduction permissible is imperative for next year.

Other developments which point to the 25 per cent slash are:

Reduced consumption in America.

A cotton carry-over on August 1 of more than 10,000,000 bales, the third largest carry-over on record.

Crop Prospects.

Estimates that a yield approaching 11,800,000 bales would be grown next year, even if every farmer eligible to sign up reduced in accordance with the 25 per cent direction.

A cotton forecast yesterday which estimated production this year at 9,634,000 bales, an increase of 191,000 over the October forecast.

Officials said the arguments for more money to those farmers who did join with the voluntary program were as convincing as those for the 25 per cent acreage slash.

Farmers who reduced acreage this year have complained that they received, in some instances, less for their product than noncooperators, even after the latter paid the Bankhead bill tax.

The view of AAA directors is that voluntary programs must be made attractive to farmers or cooperation will be lacking.

Wingless Autogiro That Hovers In Mid-Air Demonstrated Here

It floats through the air with the greatest of ease, and still it hasn't any wings. It's the wingless autogiro developed by Harold Pitcairn and associates and is shown as it approached the Army War College yesterday to land. James Ray was the pilot. High ranking military authorities watched the demonstration.

High Military Officials See Queer Craft in Smooth Test.

An autogiro plane that operates without wings even to rise and land was demonstrated yesterday at the War College before a group of high military aviation officials.

James G. Ray, vice president of the Autogiro Co., piloted the bug-like aircraft above the War College as it unfolded a bag of aeronautical tricks, such as rising or landing vertically and hovering virtually at a standstill in mid-air.

The plane lifts itself by a set of whirling rotor blades, which also keep it aloft. Absence of the customary wings gives the plane an odd appearance of nudity.

Developed under the direction of Harold Pitcairn, president of the Autogiro Co., the novel aircraft has been suggested by its sponsors as possible substitute for the observation balloon used in war time.

Where asa crew of seven or eight is required to handle the balloon, the autogiro can be operated by a single pilot.

Yesterday's demonstration was conducted with perfect smoothness.

Group Ad Rates Argued Before Supreme Court

Validity Under Anti-Trust Act Is Point in Dispute.

(Associated Press.)

Justices of the Supreme Court displayed an unusual interest yesterday in argument before them of a case involving the validity of group advertising rates under the Sherman anti-trust law.

The case was brought by the Indiana Farmer's Guide Publishing Co., of Huntington, Ind., claiming triple damages for the $146,131 it alleged it had lost between 1929 and 1933 through a combination of five companies publishing farm papers.

These five companies operated, it explained, through the Midwest Farm Paper Unit, Inc., offering combination advertising rates in seven publications issued by them.

Five in Combination.

The five companies forming the combination are the Wallace Publishing Co., Des Moines; the Wisconsin Farmer Co. and the Webb Publishing Co., both of Minneapolis; the Prairie Farmer Publishing Co., Chicago, and the McKelvie Publishing Co., Lincoln, Nebr.

Eben Lesh and U. S. Lesh, counsel for the Indiana Farmer's Guide, asserted the five companies had agreed to give a rate of $4,870 for a full page advertisement if inserted in all seven publications, but if inserted in only six the rate would be $5,167, or $297 more than for the seven. They argued that this prevented advertisers from selecting their publication in place of the Indiana edition of the Prairie Farmer.

Maxwell V. Bechtol, counsel for the five publishing companies, contended his clients had a lawful right to agree upon a rate which would apply when an advertisement was inserted in all seven publications which would be less than a combination of the individual rates for each publication.

Case Holds Interest.

Seldom have members of the court indicated more interest than was shown while the case was under argument. All asked numerous questions of counsel. It was brought out that the trial court had dismissed the suit without permitting it to go to a jury and that the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals had disposed of it on a ruling that the complaint did not show any interference in interstate commerce.

From questions by members of the court the impression was conveyed to lawyers present that the case would be sent back to the lower court for trial on its merits.

Robles Suspect's Bond at $100,000

U. S. Believed on Trail of Other Quarry.

Phoenix, Ariz., Nov. 8 (AP).—The Department of Justice tightened its grip today upon Oscar H. Robson, suspect in the June Robles kidnaping mystery, by raising his bond from $50,000 to $100,000 and pressed its quest for others believed to have had a hand in the crime.

How close the Federal operatives might be to the trail of other quarry was not disclosed, but there was a mysterious request "from the Government" for a delay in Robson's arraignment on charges of sending a $15,000 ransom note through the mails to June's father, Fernando Robles, and her grandfather, Bernabe Robles.

"I shouldn't be surprised if there are other arrests," Clifton Mathews, United States attorney, said. "It is reasonable to expect that the kidnaper of the Robles child did not operate alone."

U. S. Is Advised To Drop Stand On Navy Parity

Foreign Policy Head Asks Territorial Defense Plan Be Adopted.

In an effort to prevent a costly and dangerous naval race between the United States and Japan, Raymond Leslie Buell, president of the Foreign Policy Association, yesterday urged this Government to abandon its insistence on parity in sea power and adopt a policy based on the principle of "territorial defense."

By this term Mr. Buell explained he meant the maintenance of a "fleet and naval bases adequate to defend only the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, including the Caribbean area." He urged another five-year extension of the battleship holiday.

The American delegation at London has stood staunchly for maintenance of the ratio system in existing treaties. The Japanese insist on equality. Mr. Buell's statement is the first from any important quarter in this country suggesting the United States compromise.

He contended that "if no solution for the present deadlock is found, Japan and the United States will eventually drift into unrestricted naval competition." This would not only "intensify political tension," he argued, but would also become a heavy financial burden on the American and Japanese people.

It should be possible, Buell said, for the United States, England and Japan to reach a new naval accord on the following bases:

"First. An agreement to extend the present battleship holiday for five years, with a reduction in tonnage, or to abolish battleships altogether.

"Second. An agreement on the part of each power not to lay down any new category of vessel, such as the German pocket battleship, but to confine new construction strictly to existing types of cruisers, destroyers and submarines.

"Third. An agreement admitting the principle of defensive equality for Japan, but providing for the approximate maintenance of present tonnages on the ground that they are adequate for defense of existing territorial interests.

"Such an agreement might include a right of denunciation when any power believes that its defense needs have changed. In such case a new conference would have to be summoned."

'Bottom Drops Out' And Florida Lake Becomes Mud Flat

Tallahassee, Fla., Nov. 8 (AP).—Nature today completed one of her tricks and Lake Immonia, which at normal level covers an area of about 20 square miles, went dry.

Fish by the thousands were left to die in the sun, while other thousands were captured by hand and with garden rakes in the tiny pools that remained as the lake drained out through a sink hole.

The lake started draining about three weeks ago. Ten days ago the water had dropped to what is called the basin—an area as large as ten city blocks. Early today the "bottom fell out."

It is no new thing for big lakes in this area to go dry as suddenly as did Lake Immonia. A few years ago Lake Jackson drained out with a roar, and its bottom was cultivated for one crop year. Later it partly filled up again.

When the lakes refill, the water rises through the same sink holes where it drained out, and fish of varying sizes return with it.

Democrats Get 13 California Seats

Number of Votes Sets New Mark for Off-Year.

San Francisco, Nov. 8 (AP).—Although California chose by heavy pluralities a Republican Governor and lieutenant governor, 13 of its 20 seats in Congress and at least 37 of the 80 seats in the State Assembly will be filled by the Democratic Party, returns from Tuesday's election established today.

The election was a record-breaker for the number of votes cast in any other than a Presidential election—the 2,235,080 ballots representing approximately 71 per cent of the registration of 3,140,114.

Gov. Frank F. Merriam held a plurality of more than 240,000 over Upton Sinclair, Democrat, for the governorship. John N. Hopell, Democrat, defeated Frederick Houser, Republican, by a narrow margin in the Twelfth Congressional District.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food don't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes these good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get those two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. 25c at drug stores. © 1931 C. M. Co.

Rickenbacker Sets New Record

Trans-Continental Flight Is Completed With but One Stop.

Moorehouse, pilot of the Eastern Airline, gave the monoplane the gun and we were off for New York.

Six on Board.

Six of us were on board when we took off this morning, including Capt. Rickenbacker, Moorehouse, Capt. Charlie France, reserve pilot; James L. Kilgallen and the writer.

Half an hour after we left we had cleared the treacherous hills by thousands of feet and were soaring along nearly three miles in the air, high above the San Bernardino range. Down below us looking like nothing so much as inverted chocolate ice cream cones, were hundreds of peaks.

At 6:30 coast time, we had slipped by the San Bernardinos and were skirting the southern tip of the Mojae Desert, which, under the sparkling rays of the rising sun, reminded one of a paisley shawl. Green, purple and red patches, mingled with all the pastel shades, were spread before us.

Half an hour later, Capt. Rickenbacker waved an arm toward the east:

"There's Boulder Dam over there."

"How far away is it?" I asked.

"Ten miles?"

"No, its a good 150 miles if its a foot. You forget don't you, that straight ahead to your left, to your right—in all directions, in fact, you can see nearly 125 miles."

Grand Canyon Ahead.

At 7:15 a. m. straight over our bow, we sighted the Grand Canyon. Although 50 miles ahead, we were riding so high that we could see clear down to the bottom of the deepest gorge, where the Colorado River, looking like a long strip of chewing gum, meandered from curve to curve.

Fifteen minutes later we drove straight across the jagged canyon, a vivid mass of color.

"Somebody must have been awfully mad at the earth," drawled Si, "to cut that big hole in it."

At 7:40, two hours after the take-off, Rickenbacker stepped out of the control room to inform the newspapermen that "everything was riding sweet."

"We've averaged 192 miles an hour since we left, and that's not bad considering the tremendous load of gasoline and the fact that most of the time we've been climbing."

As smooth as an elevator. Not a tremble. Not a spring nor a bounce nor a bump. And inside the heated cabin the passengers slipped off their coats, so warm was it. This, mind you, despite the fact that outside the temperature flirted with the freezing mark.

The two 750-horsepower motors hummed a sweet soprano. We were blazing along at better than 200 miles an hour more than 3 miles above the earth.

At 9 a. m. Capt. France, who had relieved Morehouse at the controls, put the ship into a climb. We knew he was going up. Our ears popped like champagne corks. Our chests tingled, and occasionally we gasped like goldfish out of a bowl.

A few minutes later we hit the high mark of the day, the altimeter needle swinging to 17,500 feet. Any trouble and we were all goners.

At 17,500 feet I found it difficult to breathe. Gasping, I headed for the cockpit and the oxygen tank. As I stood up, my knees buckled a bit, and I had the queerest tingling sensation all over my body.

But I made it, and sticking the red rubber tube over my mouth, took deep draughts of the oxygen. It was like a shot in the arm. One inhalation and you feel better; two and you were all right, three and you felt as though you could get up there and fly the plane yourself.

Then came the worst moment of the flight. In fact, the only bad spot of the entire 2,650-mile hop. As I turned to leave the cockpit, two red lights flashed in front of my eyes. A piercing siren shook the cockpit with its blast. The motor slowed almost to a standstill, and I could hear the wind whistling by.

Danger Signal.

With the first blink of the red lights, Pilot Morehouse reached around beside me, and started pumping vigorously on a lever.

I stumbled out of the cockpit, and was met by Capt. Rickenbacker.

"What's the matter?" he asked calmly.

"Damned if I know,' I said weakly. "But whatever it is, this is a hell of a time for it to happen."

As I headed into the cabin, the other passengers saw the look on my face. They turned a bit pale and started buckling on their safety belts. I dropped in my seat and started doing the same thing.

As we sat there, looking down, our hearts missing every other beat, the cockpit door opened and Capt. Rickenbacker stepped out.

"Cheer up, men," he called: "Theres nothing the matter."

As he spoke, the big motor roared at full blast again, and the plane, which had lost hundreds of feet in altitude, soared skyward.

As Capt. Rickenbacker explained, there was nothing for us to have been worried about. What happened was that the gasoline in the auxiliary tank became exhausted and the light, siren and so forth, simply warned the pilot to cut in the regular supply.

But we didn't know that.

Pullman Ride.

From then on it was like riding in a de luxe Pullman. At 2:35 p. m. Central time Kansas City was below us, and we dropped down to find a refuelling crew of 50 ready. A cigarette, a stretch of the legs, and we were off for New York.

We had covered 1,474 miles from Los Angeles in 6 hours, 56 minutes, at an average speed of 214 miles per hour.

Just outside of Kansas City, a tail wind caught us, after we had reached 16,000 feet, and for an hour jammed us along at 255 miles. But after about an hour, it changed to a mean broadside wind, that drove us South to the regular course of the T. W. A. planes, which we followed on into New York.

After passing south of Dayton, Ohio, we roared over Wheeling, W. Va., on to Philadelphia and then home.

Capt. Rickenbacker was highly pleased with the trip.

"It simply verified," he said, "my belief that one-stop passenger cross-country flights can be made at high speed and in perfect safety."

On arriving at Newark airport, where he set her down with only the gentlest of bounces, we stepped off the plane feling fine and ready for a big steak.

Breakfast in Los Angeles, dinner at eight in New York. That's what we did, and save for that awesome moment when the siren squealed, it was nothing at all.

New York-Miami Run To Get Record Plane

The airliner which Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker yesterday flew to a new transcontinental transport plane speed record, soon will be in the New York-Washington-Miami service, officials of the Eastern Air Lines here said last night.

Flying time between Washington and Miami will be approximately six hours, the statement said. The plane will be one of a fleet of eight.

Mother of 4 Missing; Police Start Search

Police are searching for Mrs. Ruth Curles, 28, who has been missing from her home, 2033 Nichols avenue southeast, since Tuesday morning. She is the mother of four children, the youngest about 3 months and the oldest 5 years.

Her husband, William L. Curles, said he received a telegram Wednesday morning from Mrs. Curles in which she said, "Leaving town."

Post Is Given Rickenbacker's Tale of Flight

Says Regularly Scheduled 10-Hour Transport Hops Feasible.

"It means that a cross-continental transport flight in ten hours is not at all unfeasible, even today," he replied. "In five years, heavily loaded planes may be making the trip in six hours."

"Of course, that will depend on the amount of encouragement given transport companies by the Government, and their ability to carry on and develop facilities.

"It should mean that transcontinental passenger and transport flights can be made in a commercial way, at a high average speed, with only one stop.

"This service would be safe and fast. My trip should have demonstrated that."

In spite of high winds encountered at the start, and weather not altogether favorable over the T. W. A. route, Capt. Rickenbacker insisted he had "a fine trip all the way."

"At least we got an even break from the weather," he said.

"Were you comfortable, captain, even at the high altitudes?" I asked.

"Thanks to the oxygen we carried, yes," he laughed. "Each of us was equipped with individual breathing apparatus."

The veteran aviator and outstanding American World War ace, whose records against time have been achieved alike in air lane and motordrome, landed his giant ship at the low speed of 60 miles an hour, he said.

Under favorable circumstances, the same plane can be landed at 50, he added.

Capt. Rickenbacker said he wanted to show the American people that such service was practicable as an everyday business proposition.

I think he did that.

Socialite Models Draw Big Pay, 'Pros' Complain

Chicago, Nov. 8 (AP).—How much is a socially prominent name worth in the trade mart?

Professional fashion models make from $15 to $30 a weak, while society women earn from $10 to $3,000 for a single picture, it was learned today at a conference between representatives of the two groups.

The conference resulted from the professional models' charges that society women are taking work rightfully theirs through unfair competition.

Four socially prominent women, who have frequently modeled,—Mrs. Philip Maher, Miss Peggy Hambleton, Mrs. Louis Sudler and Mrs. George Senseny—assured the professional representatives they did not wish to take their jobs.

New Bank Fraud Charged in Paris

Paris, Nov. 8 (AP).—An alleged financial swindle similar to the Stavisky case, involving 21,000,000 francs, was revealed by police tonight.

Charges of abuse of confidence were filed against Charles Levy and his cousin, Joseph Levy, who floated several hundred million francs worth of bonds for a network of financial institutions on whose boards are several former high government officials.

Police charged the government paid 1,900,000 francs war damage to one of the Levy companies, to be repaid to manufacturers whose plants were damaged by Germans. The manufacturers, it was said, were unable to collect. The two men were said to have disappeared.

Mrs. Cooper's Funeral Today; Crash Victim

Body Will Be Sent to Home in Mississippi for Burial.

Funeral services will be held at 7:30 p. m. today for Mrs. Myrtle Duckworth Cooper, 36, who was killed early yesterday in an automobile crash on the Washington boulevard near Laurel. The Rev. John E. Briggs, pastor of the Fifth Baptist Church, will conduct the services in the Hines Chapel, 2901 Fourteenth street northwest. The body will be sent to Laurel, Miss., Mrs. Cooper's home, for burial.

Mrs. Cooper, a widow, had been a resident of Washington for 15 years and was employed by the District government in the Board of Public Welfare.

The driver of the automobile, Leo J. Fitzgerald, 34, a clerk in the assessor's office of the District, is in the West Baltimore General Hospital, suffering from a skull fracture, fractures of both jaws, scalp lacerations and possible internal injuries. His condition is critical. His home is at 3811 Tenth street northwest.

Police said the automobile struck a culvert about 300 yards from the Laurel substation of the Maryland State Police while it was traveling fast. Both persons were thrown clear of the wreckage. Mrs. Cooper's skull was fractured.

Mrs. Cooper is survived by a son, Edward, 13, who made his home with his mother at 2809 Fourteenth street northwest; a sister, Miss Sibyl Duckworth, of Washington, and her father, Cooper E. Duckworth, of Taylorsville, Miss.

Dance Will Follow S. C.-Villanova Game

Barney Early, alumni secretary of the University of South Carolina, will arrive here today to discuss details of arrangements Washington alumni have made for entertaining the South Carolina football team and school officials at a dance and reception at the Washington Hotel tomorrow night. The dance will follow the South Carolina-Villanova game in Philadelphia.

Charles M. Galloway is president of the local alumni group.

9,000,000 Pounds Milk Wanted for Needy Idle

Bids to supply 9,000,000 pounds of dry skim milk for the needy unemployed have been asked by the Federal Surplus Relief Corporation, Harry L. Hopkins, Federal Emergency Relief Administrator and president of the corporation, said yesterday. The bids are to be opened in Washington November 21.

Kingsford-Smith, Legal Ills Over, Bares New Plans

Los Angeles, Nov. 8 (AP).—The legal fetters which bound his fleet monoplane to the ground were cut today and Charles Kingsford-Smith disclosed plans to conquer new aerial worlds.

The Australian pilot, who recently spanned the Pacific for the second time, disclosed that he soon will begin a 17,000-mile flight homeward via New York and London.

The flight will be a continuation of his eastward crossing of the Pacific and, if successfully concluded, will constitute his second aerial circumnavigation of the globe.

Thomas Catton, a promoter who in 1928 unsuccessfully undertook to obtain financial backing for the now famous flight of the Southern Cross, attached the flier's new ship, the Lady Southern Cross, at the municipal airport this week, contending the Australian pilot owed him $1,750 for "services" and incidental expenses.

Today, however, Kingsford-Smith's legal counsel announced the attachment had been lifted after a conference with Catton's lawyers.

Indiscriminate Politics.

Tidal waves are notoriously indiscriminate in the exercise of their tremendous power. With a powerful sweep that no human agency can hinder, they strew flotsam upon the shore and sweep out to sea anything that may be caught in their backwash. When the tidal wave consists of emotional public reactions released on election day, the principle is the same.

It is not the passion of the populace for new faces in public life that is causing anxiety as the excitement of the election gives way to reflective analysis of the returns. Change often means progress. A new governor may be more competent than his predecessor. New Senators and Representatives may understand more fully than the incumbents the baffling problems confronting our society. But change which eliminates the just with the unjust, which inducts the jayhawker while it overthrows the statesman, is a reflection of popular unrest rather than popular ability to grapple with national problems.

In the recent election there have been too many cases of change which indicate no advance whatsoever in political thinking and which are all too likely to mean change for the worse. None can anticipate that the defeat of Gov. Ritchie will mean a more efficient administration of Maryland's affairs. None can argue that the replacement of Senator Reed will result in any improvement in the intellectual or moral quality of the upper legislative chamber.

These are instances which are striking because they come from nearby territory. But to look farther afield is to see much the same picture. If the electorate of Indiana has been discriminating in retiring Senator Robinson, that of Mississippi has more than swung the balance back by sending Bilbo to the Senate. While Michigan showed wisdom in retaining Senator Vandenberg, Louisiana has fallen further into line behind Huey Long. As the dust disperses one vainly searches the returns for convincing evidence that the electorate acts to reward intellectual honesty, or to penalize demagogery.

Chairman Farley conducted the campaign, as his form letter to precinct chairmen showed, with the plain objective of building up an effective political machine. In his strategy the thought of bringing men of tested ability to Washington seems to have played little or no part. The result is just what might have been expected. The New Deal has won a sweeping victory. And by the same token it has created a Congress which gives little indication of stature comparable to the problems of the hour.

Crossroads?

The country is again at the crossroads. All the headline writers say so. With the election of an overwhelmingly New Deal Congress, what next? Moreover, the Republican Party is at another crossroads, out of gas. And the Democrats seem to be in danger of rushing by a third intersection.

Someone ought to write a book on crossroads. Of course, we are so busy dashing from one to another that no one has time for such trivialities. But at least some philosopher ought to take time off and tell us why the world is always running by crossroads and never turning in to one of them.

In former times crossroads used to mean something. One came to a corner and turned. In England they seemed to acquire a sort of mystic symbolism. At least it was the custom to bury suicides in such places with stakes driven through their bodies. But in this stream-lined age crossroads are obsolete. The world may weave a tortuous course resembling a stock market chart in slow motion, but it never takes a crossroad. In fact, events move so rapidly that a turn into a crossroad could not be negotiated—not even at the risk of turning turtle.

Perhaps this talk about crossroads is only the newspaper habit of trying to make today's results from yesterday's causes appear unique. No doubt they are important. Yet it is well to remember that humanity has been at the crossroads ever since Adam walked out of the Garden of Eden, and said to Eve: "Where do we go from here?"

He Is What He Seems.

When a critic attacks a novelist, that is business. When a novelist attacks a critic, that is revenge. But when critics forgive attacks by novelists, that is news.

Luigi Pirandello, magnetic Italian author, has just been awarded the Nobel prize for literature. This in spite of the fact that in 1925 he stated with more vehemence than was necessary, "I dislike critics, and I don't believe them."

Before "Six Characters in Search of an Author" brought Pirandello world-wide fame, he lived the secluded life of a scholar in a small Italian town. He turned to playwriting during the tragic years of the World War in an effort to keep from brooding over the probable fate of his son, fighting on the Italo-Austrian front. With recognition and fame he has become, like Robert Browning before him, one of the "greatest diners-out in Italy."

Theatrical trickery has never been attributed to Pirandello, even though the very nature and theme of his plays and books has seemed to warrant it. He is possessed of a vivid conviction that man is not what he seems but "one, no one, and a hundred thousand." Yet, paradoxically, Pirandello himself is exactly what he seems to the judges of the Nobel prize—a great creative artist unconfused amid the confusion of his day.

Local Projects And Relief.

Commissioner Allen's proposal that the Municipal Center be constructed by the District Engineer Department involves a new approach to the local problem of unemployment. The Commissioner is obviously perturbed over the continued payment of doles to 23,000 jobless families and individuals. There can be nothing but admiration for his earnest efforts to work out a constructive substitute.

In brief, Commissioner Allen proposes to construct the Municipal Center with relief labor. The task would be assigned to District engineers, instead of being performed by private builders under contract. Jobless men now drawing relief benefits would be engaged at standard wage rates, and only enough engineers and technicians would be employed to direct the labor which is now living on public charity. The work would be divided among the unemployed in much the same way as other relief work is now prorated.

No one will question the sincerity of Commissioner Allen's endeavors to provide an efficient work-relief program. His motive in seeking to preserve the morale of destitute families deserves only commendation. But numerous practical questions must be asked and answered before this admitted experiment is authorized.

In the first place, the fundamental efficiency of the suggestion must be considered. Commissioner Allen admits that a Municipal Center built with relief labor might cost more than the same structure erected by a private contractor. But he contends that the difference would be offset by savings on relief. Many factors enter into this equation—the relative inexperience of the Engineer Department in actively directing enterprises of this kind; the general inferiority of relief labor, and the difficulty of rotating men so as to give every one his quota of work.

A prevalent danger in work relief is that a new clamor for enlistment on the charity rolls will be stimulated. Commissioner Allen believes that his case workers now have the situation so well in hand that they would be able to exclude any chiseling in this connection. It is probable, however, that the Allen plan would attract a considerable number of transients here. Since the District has no way of stopping such a movement, or of compelling the newcomers to move on, as many cities do, a complicated problem might arise in spite of excellent case work.

Such a result would be most unfortunate because the chief purpose of Commissioner Allen's plan is to make local work available to the unemployed of Washington. Too often contractors bring workmen here for temporary jobs and they remain as charges upon District relief funds. In trying to end this practice, it is apparent that great care must be exercised to prevent the creation of new problems of a similar nature.

Another weakness of the Allen plan may well be considered. The Commissioner is not trying to revolutionize public works procedure. His objective is to stimulate private enterprise by creating employment, in the hope that those employed on public projects will soon be absorbed into private industry. From the long-term point of view it is rather difficult to reconcile this worthy objective with the plan of eliminating private contractors from current projects.

All of the criticisms which may be assembled, however, do not solve the baffling problem of unemployment. Commissioner Allen's plan must be viewed in the light of an acute local emergency, and from this point of view it calls for sympathetic as well as careful scrutiny.

The Morro Castle Report.

Weeks of investigation have failed to reveal the specific cause of the Morro Castle tragedy. They have, however, brought forth a series of constructive suggestions that should make repetition of the disaster highly improbable.

The Steamboat Inspection Service's report on the fire, prepared by Dickerson N. Hoover, assistant director, lists ten primary factors contributing to the loss of 124 lives. Eight of these factors relate to negligence or inefficiency of the officers and crew in meeting the situation, and only two to defects in the vessel. It is painfully evident that "the human equation failed."

Underlying this failure is a chain of circumstances running back to the Steamboat Inspection Service and to Congress. Officers of the ship were slow in sounding the fire alarm, sending out an S O S and arousing the passengers. The crew lacked training and discipline. Fire-preventing equipment was used inefficiently, and, as the report puts it, "the crew was divided into improper watches." There are hints that the crew was disgruntled because of unsatisfactory labor conditions. But all this might have been corrected if stringent safety regulations had been previously adopted and enforced.

It is noteworthy that the Steamboat Inspection Service does not attempt to exonerate itself from blame. Mr. Hoover found that fire drills conducted by inspectors were "perfunctory," and that the "station bill" of the Morro Castle was "not sufficiently explicit." Recommendations for correction of these numerous deficiencies are contained in the report. But Mr. Hoover makes plain that the Steamboat Inspection Service will continue to operate under a handicap so long as its present decentralized organization is maintained.

On previous occasions the service has asked Congress to create a technical staff at Washington with power to pass upon ship construction and personnel. Such matters are now in the hands of local inspectors, which means that the rules applied to both ships and men lack uniformity and are often carelessly administered.

The desirability of a single standard for the whole country as well as a higher standard would seem to be obvious. No one anticipates that human failings can be entirely eliminated in the operation of ships. But if every vessel were constructed and operated in conformity with safety regulations devised by a board of experts, the chances of any further stain upon the reputation of our merchant marine would be greatly diminished.

Economic Dictatorships.

Reports from Germany state that the police have closed scores of retail meat and grocery stores in various cities because they have violated official orders not to increase prices. The Government, it seems, is attempting to prevent living costs from rising, while simultaneously pursuing policies which make foodstuffs scarce and dear.

The effort to attain greater economic self-sufficiency—the goal of the Hitler regime—is to a certain extent forced by necessity, since Germany is no longer able to finance essential imports. But high prices for foodstuffs are also due in large part to a policy of agrarian protectionism which has raised quotations for German farm products far above world levels. The result has been an inevitable advance in wholesale and retail prices, aggravated by the inflationary spending policies of the Government and by hoarding in anticipation of shortages.

With wages low and industrial activity showing signs of recession, it is evident that the Nazi government fears the political consequences of an advance of living costs which would bring additional pressure on the public. Nevertheless, when prices of foodstuffs are raised to provide increased incomes for farm producers, offsetting advances in prices charged consumers must be allowed if private distributors are to continue in business. The only alternatives are for the State to subsidize the distribution of foodstuffs, or else take over the functions of private management.

The German dilemma illustrates some of the problems that confront a country when it oversteps the bounds separating reasonable governmental supervision of industrial processes from a dictatorial control of private industry. Low prices fixed by official decree may camouflage the shortage of supplies which would automatically be reflected in higher prices under a regime of competition. But they can not prevent living standards from declining as scarcity sets in. Moreover, low prices can not guarantee satisfaction of consumer demands, if there is not enough to go around.

The next step, therefore, forced upon a government which sets out to control prices and living costs, is likely to be rationing of supplies. Thus, by degrees, official attempts to fit private industry into a political plan which ignores economic realities, will undermine the foundations upon which production for profit rests.

The structure of the modern industrial state is infinitely complex and extremely difficult to remodel without completely upsetting the balance of forces which, in the absence of outside interference, are at work to maintain equilibrium. When a government is prepared to sacrifice the effective functioning of the existing industrial mechanism in order to attain ulterior political ends, producers, distributors and wage earners cease to be free agents. All become cogs in a machine operated by dictators who may or may not understand what they are doing.

Gatti-Casazza Resigns.

After years of devoted service to the Metropolitan Opera Company, Giulio Gatti-Casazza has decided to resign. He made this choice several months ago, though after an exchange of delicately couched letters that would cheer the heart of an ambassador he consented to remain temporarily. But 26 years is a long time to manage an organization so beset with temperamental and financial difficulties as the Metropolitan; too long, in the estimation of many. And so now, before an audience fraught with mingled feelings, he is about to make his last bow.

Age and the increasing burdens of the managerial post were the reasons which the stout and bearded general manager gave. In his long career he has had many difficult moments. As he has said, not only has he had to have some knowledge of music, but he also had to be a diplomat and man of business, as well as a man of the theater. During the war he had to serve as a buffer between artists of varying nationalities. During the depression he has been in a particularly difficult position with the future of opera depending more, perhaps, upon his solicitation of the wealthy than of his concern for the critics.

Knowing all this, it is impossible to write off the career of Gatti-Casazza as a disappointment. There were times when the critics had sufficient justification to condemn his conservatism. Gatti-Casazza had to be prodded into any appreciation of American musical movements, being, so it seemed, quite content to go along with the old, accepted media of grand opera. But perhaps the finest praise that can be given him is that off-hand it is all but impossible to suggest anyone who can take his place. While it is easy enough to say he served too long and too conservatively, the fact remains that he leaves a vacancy which the board of directors will have great difficulty in filling.

Recently Gatti-Casazza has told of his career in the Saturday Evening Post. It is, from the time he came to New York, one of struggle, a fight at the start with lax discipline, and often with financial distress. That he managed to keep the company up to high levels is a tribute to his excellent abilities. A colorful figure, he will be missed from the scene. But whoever takes his place will have much more to contend with than he did. Chief among the newcomer's difficulties will be to revive a public interest in grand opera that has steadily been declining these past years.

No Spoils.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The people have returned to Washington what could be called a "solid Democratic" Administration. There can be tolerated no half-way measures in the attempt to bring about mitigating conditions among the general public. It is the duty of each Governor of a State within the Union to control those subject to his jurisdiction and prevent passage through his State of all parties bent on marching on the National Capitol for the purpose of forcing payment of any real or imagined debt, or money for any cause whatsoever from the national Government.

It must be remembered that our national freedom and liberty was won for us on the field of battle by our fathers, brothers and sons fighting and dying for it, and working, slaving and sacrificing here at home to assist our fighting men at the front to win their objective, which was nothing more or less than the perpetuation of government of the people, by the people, for the people.

The Government of the United States of America is a Government for all of the people, and not spoils of political conquest.

WILLIAM MEYERS.

A Peace Plan.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Ever since the World War and before, there has probably been more discussion about peace and the settlement of international frictions than during any one period since the beginning of time. There have been countless treaties signed, ententes negotiated and many naval conferences instigated for the purpose of establishing a more justified parity among the nations in relation to arms and other military equipment.

These many treaties and conferences were initiated and put into effect by the various nations with the greatest sincerity of purpose, hoping that through these instruments a medium of conciliatory agreement would be reached. However, instead of becoming instruments of peace, they have more or less tended to create international friction and agitate coercive developments.

I would suggest here a plan which I believe would help very much to remedy the situation.

Why is it not possible to have created among the nations a board composed of men possessing the highest moral integrity whose purpose would be to give to the people of the world the true facts regarding any happenings which might tend to cause international disturbances. This would do away with the many sophistical reports which might be received through other mediums.

This I believe would be a big step toward a more mellifluent feeling among nations.

Retail Troubles.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your editorial of November 2, on "Why Retail Trade Expands," you come to the conclusion that the source of increased buying-power would be an economic mystery if it were not for the Federal emergency spending of huge sums and distribution of relief money.

If you will consult and obtain facts from the majority of the retail merchants and associations, you will learn that only some of the large department stores, who are fighting hard for business by conducting constantly various styles of sales, are increasing some business, whereas the smaller stores are just struggling to cover their overhead, which increased materially, and business is much less than a year ago.

"Forward Together."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to commend you for the publication of an editorial entitled "Going Forward Together" in The Post of October 30, 1934, not from a viewpoint of personal interest in the subject, but from an interest in the article. The caption caught my attention, piqued my curiosity; therefore, I read it.

The writer gave in a few words a very concrete picture of the progress toward church unification, and as I look at it, a very unbiased picture. In this day and age, when our time for reading is so limited, it is a pleasure to find an article which presents so clear a picture in so few words of the progress of any movement.

Of course, this is due to the choice of words, and in this article the words were well chosen, the use of a mere preposition bringing whole new avenues of thought.

I also want to commend The Post-Impressionist for his highly interesting bits.

A. M. BRINING.

Washington, Nov. 2.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your issue of October 30 appears an editorial entitled "Going Forward Together," which I must say contains more material for careful consideration than I have seen in so short an article in many days. It is aptly and cleverly phrased, avoids the trite and obvious, and carries distinct stimulation and intelligent appeal to thoughtful readers. The author of that article knows how to think and how to express his thoughts in a really enjoyable fashion.

R. P. BOHLMAN.

Congressional Patronage.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The pro-Roosevelt or New Deal sentiment continues so preponderant that party lines seem almost to have vanished. The electorate are now probably figuring to what extent that situation will influence Federal recognition, patronage, etc. The Administration's attitude toward this problem will indubitably affect the doings of the next session of the Congress.

While nobody can justly accuse Mr. Roosevelt of hard-boiled partisanship in his appointments in the past, yet congressional representation has become so disproportionate to former party alignment as to probably prompt a little more recognition of the "out," many of whom so loyally supported the New Deal in the last session.

To my view, the one thing that would so perfectly fit the case, silence criticism and stimulate nonpartisan cooperation in the next Congress, as to seem almost providential, is the abolishment of the present plan of congressional patronage and the distribution of offices through Senators and Congressmen. That many of these gentlemen would count it a relief is well known. That it may, in some cases, be an abused privilege, taking up the time and thought of our highly paid representatives, even to the extent of making it their vocation and serving to their self-succession in office, is equally obvious.

Hard On The B. B.'s.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been a subscriber to The Post for many years and take pleasure in congratulating you upon the very great improvement in it, and on the interesting and attractive rotogravure section of the Sunday edition. One has been so fed up with athletes, bathing beauties, and John D. Rockefeller that it is a pleasure to see these really artistic photographs.

"A SUBSCRIBER."

Washington, Nov. 4.

That Municipal Center.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Municipal Center as planned is too extravagant. It was conceived during the inflated "twenties." Twenty million dollars is more than Pennsylvania or New York paid for their State houses.

The proposed Municipal Center is to consist merely of city offices and courtrooms, having no national uses, neither would it be of attraction to tourists, one of Washington's principal sources of income. Eight millions should be invested in a national art gallery and seven millions in a municipal auditorium to draw large national conventions.

Several million dollars should be invested in a great stadium to draw the Army-Navy football game to Washington. The intercoastal games could be played one year in the Rose Bowl and the next year in the Roosevelt Bowl here in Washington. Either one of these football games would wrap Washington up in 'coon skin coats and bury it in "mums." The Roosevelt Bowl would draw the Olympian games to Washington.

What, No Vitamins!

It is all very well for research to find a way to build machinery to make man's lot easier, to put a radio in his home and find new ways of making his dwelling more livable, but sometimes modern science goes a bit too far. A college professor, after extensive investigation, announces that apples when baked into a tasty pie lose three-fourths of their vitamin C!

Generations of boys, who have stood about in the kitchen on a Saturday afternoon when they might have been out playing football, have watched the browning crusts with here and there a pit of sirupy juice oozing forth. A marvelous perfume from the cooking apples and cinnamon spicing pervades the warm kitchen. When the pies are put in the window to cool, some of the world's most artful persuasion comes into play to get "just a little piece" before dinner.

To these past and present generations of apple-pie lovers this lack of vitamin C is going to be a great blow. But perhaps they'll try to keep the bad news from mothers and cooks throughout the land. Vitamins, or none at all, it is safe to say that they'll be back in the kitchen as soon as this "scare" is forgotten—trying to wheedle a steaming triangle of crusty ambrosia!

The Creator of Eros.

Sir Alfred Gilbert, who has died in London at the age of eighty, was one of the foremost of modern sculptors. Perhaps he will be remembered longest by Eros, the famous memorial fountain to Lord Shaftesbury which was erected in Piccadilly Circus more than 40 years ago. It was criticized by many as inappropriate. Why should that evangelical peer be honored by the figure of the little god of love? Some changes were made in it which did not please the sculptor, who suggested that it should be melted down for the sake of the valuable metal. But London took Eros to its heart, and when it was removed for the time to make way for street changes, the demands for its restoration were persistent.

Eros is now back again, presumably safe from the touch of impious hands. Sir Alfred was the sharpest critic of his own work. He destroyed anything that did not please him, including a bust commissioned by royalty. At this time he shook the dust of his native land from his shoes and went to live in Bruges. He came back, however, to do the Clarence tomb at Windsor, the jubilee statue of Queen Victoria at Winchester and the Alexandra Memorial. These public works were only part of his achievement.

A Saline Solution.

Post Office, Friday.

"WHY do people who spill salt always throw some of it over their shoulders?"

Somebody asked us that only the other day. And our reply was:

"People don't—not any more."

Then we went out to dinner. And a British diplomat—distinguished for his "realism"—sat opposite us. And he knocked over a salt-cellar. And he picked up a pinch of the salt and threw it over his left shoulder, into the butler's vest, and went right on discussing naval reductions without so much as a syllable of explanation, much less apology.

Salt has always held a symbolic value. Sometimes it has made history.

To most of the ancient world, it was a delicacy. There were government-monopolies of salt. China had one. Some government-controls of salt survive today. Salt-gathering and salt-garnering were royal pursuits. There have been wars for salt, nor is it so long since a hitch in the salt-supply evoked sanguine riots in Ecuador.

Looking, in memory, upon the highlands of Taican, old Marco Polo wrote:

"The mountains that you see toward the south are all composed of salt. People from all the countries around, to some thirty days' journey, come to fetch this salt, which is the best in the world and is so hard that it can be broken only with iron picks. It is in such abundance that it would supply the entire earth to the end of time."

But it didn't. Somebody ought to write a book on the economics of salt—if nobody as yet has. "Since earliest times, salt as an article of commerce has been of the first importance."

Among the first commercial roads constructed were roads for the transportation of salt. Italy's oldest highway is "Salt Road:" the Via Salaria. From the days of Alexander the Great, India's salt-mines have been wealth-makers. Caravans regularly braved the Libyan Desert, when Herodotus wrote, in order to bring salt from certain oases. Salt-cakes have passed as money in Abyssinia. Aren't they still legal-tender in Tibet? After all, the word "salary" merely means "salt-money." We get it from the salarium, the money paid the Roman legions wherewith to buy salt.

And now comes the Professor of Surgery in the Medical School of the University of Kansas, Dr. Thomas G. Orr, in the Scientific Monthly, repeating this suggestion:

"If your ancestors ate salt, you are probably fair-skinned; if not, you belong to the dark races."

Of course, Dr. Orr doesn't put this forth as his own theory, nor yet as a theory that he adopts. The "rather astounding hypothesis has," he says, "evidently been advanced by someone interested in racial complexions. If you came out of the north, where there was plenty of salt, you are probably white—if from intermediate countries such as China, Korea and India, where salt was not so plentiful, you are probably moderately pigmented." He smiles, and he adds: "The scientific proof of the relationship of racial salt-intake to racial color may, in the minds of many, still be lacking; but the doubt does not mar the attractiveness of the theory."

Yet, merely considering its economic importance, what wonder that salt should early achieve a religious symbolism? Moses decreed the use of salt in "every oblation of . . . meat-offering." Salt entered the ritual of the Covenant.

In this year of 1934, when an Arab says that "there is salt between you and me," he means that there is a sacred friendship. Salt is one of the oldest signs of hospitality. It is offered, with bread, by the Balkan bride to her husband. When the little monarch of Yugoslavia enters any of the towns in his kingdom, he is met by the mayor bearing a gift of bread and salt.

And mere supersition?

Dr. Orr points out: "In parts of Germany, salt placed behind the ears of a newborn baby protects against evil spirits. In Portugal, after the birth of a baby, the mother and child are protected against evil influences by scattering ground salt on the roof of the dwelling, so that the witches may keep busy gathering up the salt and do them no harm."

When that question about throwing salt over the shoulder was asked us, there glimmered, far back in our head, a memory which might explain at least the belief that to spill salt is to invite trouble. We thought there had existed a legend to the effect that it was the salt-dish into which the False Disciple dipped his bread and so revealed himself a traitor.

But whence, then, the addition of tossing over-shoulder some grains of the spilled salt? How did that act of, apparently, pagan propitiation come to be grafted upon what may itself have originally been an entirely Christian association of ideas?

We don't know.

Britain Vexed Over Sedition, Betting Issues

But Liberal, Socialist and Tory Are Singularly Working Together.

By Edward Acheson.
(Special Correspondent of The Post.)

THE present session of Parliament, which reassembled October 30, demonstrates almost as though it had been called for that purpose, one of the most significant phenomenon of current British politics—the virtual agreement on all fundamental questions between factions, apparently and theoretically, irreconcilable.

Sharp cleavages of opinion there are, but the divisions cut across party lines, and, for the most part, seem to concern themselves with methods of approach rather than final objectives.

The two most discussed measures now before Parliament bring this into sharp relief, the betting and lotteries bill and the incitement to disaffection, or, as it is commonly called the sedition bill. Both are government measures: the government has an overwhelming majority: the Labor-Liberal opposition is only orally effective.

On orthodox party lines neither measure would present a problem. But orthodox party lines have little or nothing to do with the matter for the moment. The betting bill, for instance, in the first of its two parts, legalizes the use of the "totalisator" on greyhound tracks. Dog racing, which is tremendously popular in England, is the "Sport of Kings" scaled down for the workingman's consumption.

It would seem, therefore, that Labor should be wholeheartedly in favor. But the bill provides that betting shall be legal for only 104 days in the year, which, in the opinion of its opponents, would seriously limit if not entirely destroy the sport. Furthermore, it can't be blithely assumed that Labor, in contradiction to the laboring man, is in favor of gambling in any guise.

Labor, as a movement and party, has a considerable admixture of non-Conformism in its background, which suggests to the British mind something of the firm morality encouraged by Methodism in the United States. So the opposition may not be in opposition on this part of the bill.

• • • •

THE prime minister, personally, stands firmly against "having a little something on the nose" of either horse or dog. He also frowns with equal vehemence on the principle of lotteries, especially foreign or Irish sweepstakes, which are expressly forbidden in part two of the betting bill. But since it is somewhat difficult to unearth a member of Parliament who hasn't at the present time one or more tickets on the Cambridgeshire, it isn't unreasonable to predict some dissension within the ranks of the majority.

However, there may be a considerable amount of voting "No" and gambling "Yes," which practice should have a markedly familiar ring to American ears. The government has decided to stand by the "whole bill or nothing." Yet, in its earlier readings, "the fault-finders included members of all parties."

This tendency to division on other than party lines is even more marked in the case of the sedition bill, which has caused widespread criticism throughout the country. The bill aims to prevent the "seduction of the army and navy from its loyalty and allegiance." There are, of course, laws to this effect in force at the present time, laws to which no one objects very strenuously. But the sedition bill, in reinforcing the existing laws, infringes, so its opponents claim, the rights of free speech and action. Especially controvertial is the provision for general search warrants over the signatures of two justices of the peace.

The bill was originated at a time when a large number of people believed that the loyalty of the troops was being undermined both from the left and right, from communism and fascism. Today this belief is not so widely held, although the attorney general, Sir Thomas Inskip, is the authority for the existence of "an organization, financed from abroad," for the "deliberate purpose" of seducing the loyalty of the armed forces.

• • • •

WHETHER the danger from such an "organization" is sufficiently great to warrant measures of "search and seizure" is open to question. The council for Civic Liberties doesn't think so and has organized demonstration in Trafalgar square as well as mass-lobbying in the House. The radical and Labor press doesn't think so and has agitated vociferously against its passage. That, perhaps, is to be expected. But that the House of Lords, which is not controlled by the same parliamentary procedure as the House of Commons, should even consider a "filibuster" to insure the defeat of the measure, is, to say the least, novel and interesting.

The Established Church, one of the strongholds of Toryism, also is not presenting a united front. The Bishop of Birmingham finds an objection in the fact that under the proposed bill both he and his wife could be fined £200 and sentenced to jail for two years—merely for their views on the British policy in India!

However, perhaps the most significant contribution to the discussion of the sedition bill is made by the Socialist peer, Lord Allen, of Hurtwood. That he should denounce this bill is not, in itself, unusual. But the preamble to his argument illustrates admirably this interesting agreement on fundamentals which is only rippled by the superficial clashes of party politics.

Lord Allen says, "We, who are Socialists, must remember that the day may come when we are the government. We must tolerate no proposal to seduce the forces of law and order, whilst we are the opposition, which could be followed by Fascist minorities when we ourselves are in power."

There is virtual agreement in England today between Tory, Liberal and Socialist. All are moving in the same direction—the divisions arise only over the means of conveyance.

Along the Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

The Munitions' Makers.

THE rapidity with which I am heading straight for the devil has come to frighten me. I really didn't realize just how far I had dropped until I found myself entertaining a secret admiration for our munitions manufacturers. There is no need of trying to keep it a secret. For one thing, it would sooner or later get out and again confession is supposed to be good for the soul.

BARGERON

One has only to look at Tuesday's vote to see just how degraded I have become. Unquestionably, the Senate committee's inquiry of the munitions folk influenced millions in their voting. If it didn't the Democratic managers didn't know their stuff. It was their purpose in conducting the investigation. It was another lifting of the curtain to let the people know under what horrible conditions we have been living at the hands of the Republicans, another revelation of the Old Deal which the New Deal with an amazing understanding of psychology permits us periodically to see.

• • • •

And yet what was the influence on me? The inquiry ended with my having more admiration for our own munitions manufacturers than before. Such a man is utterly lost. The reasoning by which I arrive at my admiration only serves to emphasize this statement. Yet it will show just what a task the leaders of our country are up against, just what a job lies ahead of those fired with the spirit and zeal of the New Deal, the obstacles that lay in their path.

An understanding of such sinister forces as have been at work upon me should encourage the New Deal supporters to bear with their leaders when they seem to falter in the march toward the more abundant life. It will not be that they are throwing overboard their high ideals. It will mean simply that the devil is still against the good, and a very resourceful person, indeed.

I believe it is a fact that everybody agrees that some time we will have another war. Certainly, our Government believes it. We maintain a military and naval defense. It is a continual bone of contention as to whether it is large enough. But no one seriously contends that it should be done away with entirely.

Our subsidizing of the air mail and merchant marine is predicated upon the need for them in time of war. We must have a civilian air force and merchant fleet capable of being quickly transformed into fighting units, it is contended. The Democrats have been fooling around with the air mail and ship subsidies, but I am yet to hear any one of them say the plan is to cut the subsidies out.

Well, it seems to me, that we will surely have to have munitions in this war. Surely, we should have plants ready to supply the military establishment and the civilian air and merchant marine forces with munitions.

The question arises then as to whether we should let the munitions plants operate on their own and keep geared up to high production by bribing South American officials or by subsidizing these plants and taxing the American people.

• • • •

There is my case, my friends, as Mr. Roosevelt would say. Frankly, my admiration for the munitions' manufacturers goes beyond even this. I think it is heartening in these times when everybody looks to Washington for a living, when business men say they can't live without a tariff subsidy on this and that, or without an NRA to stifle their competitors, when the farmer insists the Government must support him—really, it buoys one up to see a group that says they can get along without any Government support at all.

Or rather, all they seem to ask for is an occasional admiral or a gunboat to go on a sales mission for them. That's getting off cheap.

Soft-Spoken and Gentle, He Started Life as a Teacher.

This is the first of a series of sketches of the newly elected Senators, which will appear in this space daily, written by competent observers.

GEORGE L. RADCLIFFE, the new junior Senator from Maryland, will not add to either the gayety or the color of the Senate, but will bring to that body a background well versed in finance and his country's history, and he should be a force for orthodoxy in money matters.

There is nothing spectacular about George Radcliffe. He is quiet and unassuming, and one talking with him casually for the first time would not realize that for several years he has been the directing executive of one of the largest security and bonding companies in the country.

He has one of the breezy, go-getter mannerisms usually found in big business executives. Mr. Radcliffe started life as a teacher of history and has never lost his fondness for the academic life. He is soft-spoken and gentle in manner; calm and reflective in action—still a perfect picture of a teacher of history.

Mr. Radcliffe, however, is an ardent advocate of the New Deal, largely because of his friendship with President Roosevelt. The friendship started 14 years ago, when, after his defeat for the Vice Presidency in 1920, Mr. Roosevelt became the New York vice president of the Fidelity & Deposit Co.

• • • •

MR. RADCLIFFE was then, as now, senior vice president of this Baltimore company and was Mr. Roosevelt's immediate superior. Since 1932 Mr. Radcliffe invariably has been labelled "the President's former boss." Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Radcliffe soon became warm friends and this friendship became closer when the President was stricken with infantile paralysis.

Throughout his campaign Mr. Radcliffe eulogized the President's efforts. He singled out for praise the social aspects of the New Deal—the efforts to improve working conditions; the care of the destitute and unemployed and the efforts to save the homes of financially-distressed householders. He did not engage in any discussion of the Roosevelt monetary and fiscal policies.

His opponents could find nothing to say against him, except that if elected he would become "a rubber stamp" for the President; that he would submerge his convictions to support his friend, the President. Henry L. Mencken, once the terrible child of America, urged his defeat on the ground that he was "too close to the throne" and that unrelenting opposition to Roosevelt policies was needed in the Senate.

Mr. Radcliffe was born 57 years ago at Lloyds, in Dorchester County on the Eastern Shore of Maryland, of parents who lived comfortably. He prepared for college at the Cambridge Seminary, later entering Johns Hopkins University. After obtaining a degree of bachelor of arts, Mr. Radcliffe remained three more years at the university working for a doctor's degree, which he won with a thesis devoted to the turbulent Civil War period of Maryland's history and the manner in which the then Gov. Hicks attempted to maintain harmony within his strife-torn State.

Dr. Radcliffe returned to his home county to serve as principal of the Cambridge Seminary, a small school in the water town of Cambridge. But at the end of one year, he went to Baltimore to teach history at the city college, numbering among his students William Curran, now one of the Democratic bosses of Baltimore.

• • • •

YOUNG RADCLIFFE, however, desired to enter a more remunerative field than teaching history in a public high school, so he undertook the study of law at the University of Maryland at the same time, winning his law decree in 1903.

In the same year he entered the law department of the American Bonding Co. and three years later, at the age of 29, he became the company's general counsel. Later he was made a vice president and when this company was merged into the Fidelity & Deposit, he became senior vice president of the latter company, a position he still holds.

The men making up this company and affiliated enterprises for years have constituted one of the most forceful groups in Maryland finance and politics. But it was through his Eastern Shore associations that Mr. Radcliffe became interested in politics.

GEORGE L. RADCLIFFE,
new junior Senator from Maryland.

His first office came when Emerson C. Harrington, of Cambridge was elected Governor in 1915. He named Mr. Radcliffe a member of the Liquor License Commission for Baltimore. This body regulated the liquor traffic so strictly that many of the abuses which turned the remainder of the country to national prohibition were absent in Baltimore—a fact which accounts for the hostility of Baltimore to the eighteenth amendment.

Later Gov. Harrington named Mr. Radcliffe his secretary of State, a post he held for one year. Mr. Radcliffe had no other practical political experience. He held no other States offices. He was an ardent supporter of Gov. Ritchie and served as master of ceremonies at the four Ritchie inaugurals.

In Presidential elections, Maryland Democrats always seek to get the candidate's best friend in the State to serve as a campaign manager. So in 1932 Mr. Radcliffe was selected to direct the Roosevelt campaign in Maryland.

• • • •

WHEN President Roosevelt created the Public Works Administration he insisted that Mr. Radcliffe serve as regional administrator for the tenth district, comprising Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee and Kentucky. Mr. Radcliffe demurred, claiming he could not leave his business interests. He finally consented to accept the appointment after the President argued with him for hours.

Despite these excursions into public life, Mr. Radcliffe remains an incongruous figure in the hurly burly of a campaign headquarters. Political aspirations were never attributed to him and it is generally agreed in Maryland that his candidacy for the Senate, through a series of circumstances, was forced on him.

A year ago his name was mentioned as a possible candidate for Governor, but he scoffed at the idea. Subsequently, however, Senator Millard E. Tydings became alarmed over the hostile attitude of the Eastern Shore to Gov. Albert C. Ritchie. The Senator first undertook to persuade the Governor his fifth-term race was ill-fated and failing that, he joined with the Eastern Shore leaders in petitioning the Governor to run for the Senate and Mr. Radcliffe to seek the governorship.

Mr. Radcliffe announced his candidacy, but Gov. Ritchie refused to yield. Mr. Radcliffe had no desire to run against the Governor, and when he failed to obtain indorsements from Democratic leaders on the Western Shore, he found himself in an uncomfortable position. Senator Tydings likewise appeared to be on the end of a limb.

• • • •

OUT of friendship for Senator Tydings, E. Brooks Lee, as his last act before retiring from Maryland politics, arranged a compromise whereby the Ritchie county leaders would support Mr. Radcliffe for the Senate and the Eastern Shore leaders would not further oppose the Governor. Mr. Radcliffe accepted this arrangement and now comes to the Senate seat which Gov. Ritchie contemptuously rejected.

Mr. Radcliffe dearly loves the Eastern Shore, owning three farms in Dorchester County, where the "dirt" farming of the section is carried on. He has frequently asserted that the best investment he can recommend is a good farm, and that for years he has put his savings into Dorchester County land.

The new Senator has accumulated one of the largest private collections in Maryland of books on history. His library also includes about 600 volumes devoted to every conceivable aspect of Christmas. Mr. Radcliffe seldom appears at social functions, spending his evenings usually at home. He is married and has one son.

A member of the Hopkins track team when he was at Hopkins, Mr. Radcliffe in his campaign speeches used the language of that sport to point his remarks. He is a poor orator, although he improved during the campaign. Not actively interested in sports now, he derives pleasure, however, from a group which luncheons daily in Baltimore, having as its only rule that none may say anything complimentary about any one.

No End of Books

Women as Kay Boyle and Richard Aldington See Them in Latest Novels.

By Theodore Hall.

"WHAT is woman?" Pilate might have said. He would not have stayed for an answer to that, either—replies on the topic are still coming in.

Two novels fresh from the presses stand as examples—Kay Boyle's "My Next Bride" (Harcourt Brace, $2.50) and Richard Aldington's "Women Must Work" (Doubleday Doran, $2.50). Both, more or less directly, tell what women are by showing the modern lot of the young and earnest, girl without money, the first in Paris, the second in London. And they prove that Mr. Aldington is filled with a narrow and indignant compassion, and Miss Boyle with a compassion broadened by humor and a rich coloring of life. The honors go to Miss Boyle.

"My Next Bride" is the phrase by which Antony—an extremely rich young expatriate from Boston, happily married, something of a genius, who talks in an engaging elliptical manner—introduces Victoria to his friends. She has come out of the Midwest to Paris, so poor that she has to accept food from a pair of impoverished old Russian gentlewomen. When they bring her to Sorrel and his Duncanesque colony of Greek-robed dancers and weavers, Victoria tends the colony's shop and at least gains bread and butter.

She gains more from chance-born championship with Antony, a relation Miss Boyle could not have made more true or lovely by leaving less innocent. But Antony is too ineffectual to help Victoria solve her life. When the hard heel comes down, it is Antony's wife who stands by her side.

Miss Boyle does not underrate the jeopardy of her heroine; there is no Polly-Anna softening of the scenes. Yet bitterness is the last of the book's impressions. Partially that springs from Miss Boyle's rare eye for character—the candor and freedom from pose of Victoria; Antony's real, though pathetic charm; the humor of the old Russian women; and the quick insight into the grotesquerie and sincerity of Sorrell and his group. Partially we owe it to Miss Boyle's extremely brilliant writing—poetic, flowered with images, lithe and flicking as a rapier.

And most, I think, comes from the fact that Miss Boyle was content to paint a highly individualized and vivid picture, without trying to prove a thing. "My Next Bride," her fourth novel, should delight her admirers, and please many others who have thought her remote from the plain reader.

• • • •

Mr. Aldington, on the other hand, sets out to prove his point like a lawyer. The lot of the middle-class young woman is absolutely bitter, and money buys everything—there is his theme.

Etta ran away from dull Dortborough, was nearly swamped by the business world, kept her love for the right man and then flung it away on the wrong, longed for a child until she had it and then brought it up with the same mistakes her mother made, and finally (just like a magazine story) reached monetary success.

"Women Must Work" is a constant diagram of the romantic mind. Etta wanted "to stand alone"—and she failed in almost every relationship she inevitably made. One can't deny the truth of the tale; Mr. Aldington's documentation is quite accurate. But the incidents are banal in literature, the total effect more than a little dull, and the final irony of Etta's dissatisfaction no more impressive than other good old novelistic stand-bys.

• • • •

Felix Salten showed his light, deft touch with animals in the memorable "Bambi." Now, in "Florian: the Emperor's Stallion" (Bobbs-Merrill, $2.50), he goes farther and paints for us a gorgeous and tragic era, Austria 1901-21, behind the figure of this aristocratic horse. Florian was once lead-horse for the emperor's coach; then he fell to pulling a milk-wagon. The poignant parallel deepens Herr Salten's writing.

• • • •

Hunters and fishermen will rave about "Aleck Maury: Sportsman" (Scribner, $2.50), by Caroline Gordon. The author of "Penhally" tells of the long life of a Southern mountaineer, from the sixties to the present, who kept his passion for gun and rod. Very healthy, with distinct and charming flavor.

Politics And People

By Elliott Thurston

Not a Mandate.

THOSE critics of the Administration who have complained that the New Deal was foisted upon the country without a mandate from the voters saw that argument swept overboard in the election. However impossible it may be in cold fact to tell wha animated millions of voters on Tuesday, the political world will construe the outcome as a specific indorsement of the New Deal.

In truth, of course, no real choice was offered to the voters. The Republican Party had ceased to exist as a national entity with an alternative program and policy. There was something ironic about Mr. Hoover's eleventh-hour appeal, published in New York, calling for election of a "virile" Republican opposition. There was no virile opposition, Republican or otherwise, except in a very few isolated cases. And this scattered opposition could offer nothing except dissent. It offered no hope of making its will effective.

New Dealers are not proud of the way in which the outpourings of money from Washington were timed and exploited politically. All that was indefensible, yet in the very nature of things, money was bound to be flowing from Washington, and few politicians, regardless of the party labels attached to them, could be counted upon to resist the temptation to make the most of it politically. In Maryland, the Republican conquerer of the "perpetual" Gov. Ritchie was not above reminding the voters that he probably could be more successful in tapping the New Deal for money than the estranged Mr. Ritchie.

ASSUMING that the electorate was bribed, it follows that the voters must have been as ready to take as the politicians were to offer the bribes. That is a rather broad indictment of the state of public morality in this country. Whether the charge is justified or not, the fact remains that the New Deal has now received what by all the perhaps dubious canons of political diagnosis is a mandate from the people. And beyond the moralities, the most pertinent concern is what the New Deal means to do with the mandate.

Wall street, with its usual facility in instantaneous diagnosis, concludes that the meaning of the election is captured in the one, terrifying word "inflation." The easy assumption is that because spending—if not bribery—has proved so popular with the voters, Mr. Roosevelt will now sanction such a continued flow of funds from Washington that the budget will go to smash, the Federal credit will be ruined, and the bitter experiences of other countries with demoralized currency will be repeated in the United States. Perhaps.

But that seems to some observers a rather narrow view of it. All the counsels of wisdom, all the teaching of history is against such a course. Nothing that Mr. Roosevelt has done, with all his experiments, justifies the belief that he will now permit it to happen if he can possibly prevent it. He has every reason to be against it, and none to be for it.

• • • •

IF Congress had had its way the country would have been flooded with greenbacks long since. If Mr. Roosevelt had yielded to the inflationists in Congress he would have exercised the inflationary powers which Congress overwhelmingly voted him as far back as April of 1933. He could balance the budget, on paper, tomorrow if he were willing to yield to the Congressional inflationists. He could have done it at any time in the past 18 months. He can, at will, under these powers, issue $3,000,000,000 of greenbacks, discount $3,000,000,000 of notes with the reserve system, and realize some $4,000,000,000 more by devaluing the dollar down to 50 cents—to say nothing of silver revaluation. Had the congressional inflationists prevailed, or had Mr. Roosevelt capriciously met the orthodox clamor for budget-balancing, he could have raised upwards of $10,000,000,000 at any time.

• • • •

THAT he has resisted this course, even though he has done so by maneuvering rather than by fighting, should have some weight in analyzing the probabilities now. There is no reason to suppose that the new Congress will be any more for inflation, as such, than the last one. There is no reason to suppose that Mr. Roosevelt has changed his views because of the election. There are, on the contrary, numerous evidences that he is more impressed than ever with orthodox economics and disillusioned about Prof. Warren's gold jugglery, among other unorthodoxies.

The real battle is, to be sure, against spending—that is, against spending to the point where ruin of credit and currency is inescapable. But currency demoralization, by whatever route, is the same. It would ruin the New Deal as well as the country. And surely there is no reason for deducing that the election has made any such disaster more acceptable to Mr. Roosevelt or more likely to befall.

U. S. May Protest Reich Import Law

Report on Restriction of U. S. Cars Asked.

The State Department hinted yesterday at a possible protest to Germany against its drastic limitation of American automobile imports by requesting the American Embassy in Berlin to study the restriction order and make a report, the United Press says.

Officials declined to comment pending receipt of the report, but it was understood they regarded the German order as a violation of the "most favored nation" clause of the German-American commercial treaty. This clause entails a promise that Germany will accord the United States equal treatment with that of the nation receiving most favorable treatment.

The order would virtually exclude all American made motor vehicles from the German market because it compels United States manufacturers to export from Germany goods equivalent in value to at least five times what the cars they import are worth.

Screened Character

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

IN the sreen version of "The Barretts of Wimpole Street," we see perhaps the limit of attainment by a film-play when compared with the original drama; I mean, of course, where the play under consideration is interesting mainly not because of scenic effects or sensational incidents but because of the revelation of character through the dialogue.

Now the screen version of The Barretts, although it has many excellent features, is distinctly inferior to the original drama. Yet I recommend all those who have seen and all those who have not seen the original play to attend the "talkie;" because it is worth seeing any how, and those who saw the play will enjoy another presentation, with a different cast.

The screen version of course is able to take us out on the street, out walking in the park, and down stairs in the drawing room; but whereas this might appear at first sight to be an advantage, it is really a loss of effectiveness. The complete concentration of the terrific drama in one room added greatly to its intensity.

Futhermore, the cast in the film version is not so good, though the actors are all experienced and do as well as could be expected. Katharine Cornell was simply flawless as Elizabeth; there was an intense emotional fervor that hardly any other actress could reveal in that particular role. The Robert Browning in the original play was better than the screen actor, because more powerfully masculine. The screen player was exceedingly good, but he was almost too handsome; the beautiful outlines of his face and figure robbed him of the rugged force necessary to the impersonation. But the chief loss was in the character of the father.

Now Charles Laughton is one of the ablest actors living; but he was physically quite unsuited to this role. Mr. Waldom was lean, hard, austere; Mr. Laughton made the man repulsive, and it was only his splendid art that saved him from being ridiculous.

Furthermore, I did not hear in the screen play what were to me the most impressive lines in the drama. Elizabeth said, "Oh, Robert, how can you love me when you are so strong and I am so weak!" to which Robert replied, "Elizabeth, my strength needs your weakness, just as much as your weakness needs my strength." I am quoting from memory.

I saw the original play three times; and I could hear people crying and sobbing. I saw or heard no signs of emotion in the screen play.

I was very glad to see the screen version of Charlotte Bronte's famous novel, "Jane Eyre." I had re-read this a few weeks previously, not knowing at all that it was being filmed. I think one of the great services that motion pictures can accomplish is by making screen versions of famous novels; and "Jane Eyre" certainly has all the elements of drama. The screen version is too short, and it could easily have included more incidents in the novel; but I certainly enjoyed it. One thing is curious. It has happened more than once that the motion picture version of a novel is more cheerful than the story from which it is taken. But in "Jane Eyre," any spectator who had not read the novel would leave the theater believing that Edward Rochester was doomed to incurable blindness. I wonder why?

New Songster Makes Debut At Shoreham

'Tiny' Appears in Lounge; Troika Will Come to Life Tonight.

By Kay Ware.

The Shoreham popped a new one on the public yesterday in the form of an entertainer by the name of Tiny in the cocktail lounge. Tiny sits at a little piano, plays and sings. Besides Tiny, even a 9-foot grand would look stunted. His name is the height of irony or something.

He's written scores of songs for New York's Eddie Davis, and for Washington's Marty Rubin. Others he arranges in his own inimitable manner. The word "inimitable" is his selection. He says, "I'm not arch, nor cute, nor coy. I try to be smart. That's the best word for it, isn't it?"

He has pinch-hitted for Walter O'Keefe, ran a night club in Lake Placid, appeared in Paris at "Le Boeuf Sur le Toit," and in London at the Cafe de Paris. And has sung for numerous diplomatic and social parties in Washington.

Among his audiences have been Peter Arno, Heywood Broun, Wheeler and Woolsey, Barbara Hutton, Viola Brothers Shore, Thyra Winslow, Osgood Perkins, June Walker, Margaret Sullavan, Elisha Cook, jr., and Rudy Vallee.

Get him to tell you about Peter Arno and the medicine cabinet. It's a howl.

Line-up for Shoreham's floor show: Kehr-Rousseaux-Kehr dancing trio, with Viennese numbers. The lady, Hollyn Kehr, majored in English at college, here brother was a student in cotton exporting, their cousin, Rousseaux, in accounting. Left varied careers for a mutual one on the stage.

John Hale, tenor, pleases with "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" and "La Donna e Mobile."

Troika Opening Tonight.

It's official at last. Club Troika will open tonight with new management, new cocktail lounge on the first floor, a new band and a list of entertainers.

Ethel Postor, Phil Spitalny's favorite singer, is featured. Gregory Dniestroff, recently featured in a Russian vaudeville revue, is master of ceremonies. Mme. Pauline Achmativa, operatic star, is a member of the show. Matt Windsor, remembered from last year, will lead the orchestra. Plays piano accordion.

The revue is characterized as Russian-American.

Club Michel's line-up: Frank McCormick, Broadway master of ceremonies; Ruth Kidd, formerly Miss New York, and of Earl Carroll's "Vanities;" Esther and Hazelton, dance team, glorified by the late Flo Ziegfeld and engaged by Texas Guinan in her night club; Artist-Model Peggy O'Brian and Gwendolyn Jones, dancer.

Archie Hawk at Heigh-Ho.

At Heigh-Ho: Double-jointed Archie Hawk, with some exciting tap dances, and Maxine, former C. B. S. network star, with songs and good looks. Pete Macias, Marty Rubin and orchestra always good for several laughs.

Brooke John's snug downstairs cellar is a cozy retreat. Very good Negro orchestra, new heating system keeps you warm no matter how chilly the night. Drive out to the Barn when city life becomes oppressive.

Those three lads at the Madrillon change their name each week, it seems. They've been the Three Southern Accents, the Three Southern Jacks, the Three Ginger Snaps, the Carolina Tarheels, and the public is beginning to get confused.

But when you've heard their "you-alls," and "heahs," and caught a glimpse of their grins, and tapped your feet to the rhythms of their banjos, you go away saying, "Those Three Southern Accents have the word for it, don't they?"

Oh, where; oh, where has Habana gone?
Oh, when will the opening be?
With its tropic sky and its Spanish song,
Oh, when; oh, when will the shadow of the old Loewenkeller depart from Connecticut avenue and permit the light of Club Habana to escape?

Sidney's music floats above the cocktails and conversation of the Carlton lounge. This unit can and will play anything from the latest foxtrot to the most classic chamber music. Tangoes are particularly fine.

Street Cars.

The conductor: "Take the car behind this one, ma'm" . . . Weary woman, tangled up in parcels, trying to find that little pink transfer. "I had it just a minute ago. I can't imagine. . . . while other passengers glare. . . . School girls, laden with books, their fresh cheeks streaked with unbecoming rouge. . . . High aughter. . . . Straps that swing . . . and swing. . . . Reaching, slipping, "Oh, I beg your pardon . . ." Scuffs on newly shined shoes . . . Men who are wan, with frightened eyes. The large woman who says, "I'd like to give my seat to one of them. Poor things." . . . Lady, in ropes of pearls with the air of I cawn't bear to ride in street caws but our caw broke down this mawning." . . . Tiny children hang to mothers' skirts and try to keep their heads above the pushing . . . a baby, in a pink blanket, asleep on a ragged shoulder. . . .

Newspapers that are hard to fold and unfold. . . . Why does the large man always open his widest? . . . The movie dates, whispering and smiling to each other. . . . Policemen get on at the front door and don't pay any fare . . . lucky policemen.

The cry on the conductor, "Let 'em, out, pease. Move up t' the front—" . . . a squeak of brakes, a slowing stop . . .

Letting Out a Secret.

Who was the happy couple that asked Heigh-Ho's orchestra to play the wedding march the other night? Not only once, but so many times that other guests got wise, applauded, and the happy couple was covered with confusion and publicity.

Wives whose claim to fame is beauty
Decorate the home, and yet,
Who has ever seen a cutie
Make a perfect omelette?

If you have a soft spot in your heart for "Sweetie Pie" drop in the Willard's Bamboo Room and hear Ernestine Gardner sing it. Then you'll have a softer spot in your heart for Ernestine.

Ickes Hurls Lie At Claim PWA Bought Votes

Would Not Have Expended Funds So Rapidly, He Retorts to Critics.

Charges by "self-seeking politicians" that the PWA bought votes in Tuesday's election were characterized as falsehoods last night by Secretary Ickes in a radio speech.

Practically all the PWA's original $3,300,000,000 appropriation, he declared, was allocated by last January 19. He said allotments from $400,000,000 additional made available in June "diminished to a mere trickle" by midsummer.

"If we had been playing politics," he added, "we would not have voted money as rapidly as we did or as early as we did. We would have dragged the process out to greater lengths. We would have been particularly active during recent weeks when we were doing nothing.

"Would Have Held Back."

"We would have held back a few hundred millions of dollars to put to use where they would do the most good as the campaign developed. The fact that we did none of these things, that, on the contrary, we allocated our money as rapidly as possible, proves conclusively that PWA's sincere purpose is, as it always has been, to win recovery and not votes."

Ickes seemed particularly irked over claims that he bought votes in the Maine election in September.

Discusses Situation in Maine.

"Republican leaders and their partisan organs during the campaign," he added, "badly made and reiterated the false charge that the administrator of public works had bought the State of Maine when it was clear that the citizens of that State had merely weighed the Republican Party and found it wanting."

Fewer PWA projects were approved for Maine, he declared, than for any other State.

Many of the "untruthful allegations," Ickes said, were made by "certain editors who would stimulate discord and arouse a spirit of uncertainty and unrest, who would raise doubts in the minds of the people as to the very integrity of our Government and all for no more worthy purpose than to elect a few local politicians to office."

Of the absence of graft, he said: "No candidate, however hungry he may have been for office, at any time so far as I am aware has even intimated that there has been any graft or corruption or double dealing chargeable to the PWA.

"PWA has not been a pork barrel. There has been no log-rolling in its administration. It has been honest and it has been efficient. The money appropriated for it has been administered as a trust fund."

$3,500,000 Tunnel Grant.

Harold L. Ickes, Public Works Administrator, yesterday signed a contract for a loan and a grant of $3,500,000 to enlarge the Moffat tunnel pioneer bore and other construction which will provide increased water supply for Denver, it was announced by the Public Works Administration.

Mill Employes, Rioting, Stone Officials' Houses

Ludlow, Mass., Nov. 8 (AP).—Mobs stoned the houses of mill and town officials here tonight in a renewal of rioting ensuing from a strike of mill workers. The 25 State troopers rushed here earlier in the day apparently were unable to control the crowds.

The selectment said they were considering the advisability of asking that National Guard soldiers be called out.

Toscanini May Return to Scene Of Triumphs at Metropolitan Merger of Philharmonic Symphony With Opera Is Considered.

New York, Nov. 8 (AP).—The possibility of Arturo Toscanini returning for a season or two to the scene of much of his triumph, the Metropolitan Opera, loomed tonight in the wake of discussion of the retirement of Giulio Gatti-Casazza.

Friends of the maestro said he has wished for some time to conduct a series of opera again at the "Met" before his retirement.

Toscanini is now 67. Year by year, his weeks with the Philharmonic Symphony have been shortened. It frequently has been stated he would retire in two years or so.

One thing that would make his return to the Metropolitan more likely would be a merger of the Opera and the Philharmonic.

Such a merger is under consideration by the boards of the Opera and the Symphony Society and soon should reach the stage of actual negotiation.

If carried through, it would be the most significant and important shift in the musical structure of the country.

The Philadelphia Orchestra innovation this season involved only the presentation of opera by the Orchestra Association with full symphony, although on lines of modernization of staging.

However, Toscanini's friends said, the famous conductor would not assume the responsibilities of direction if he returned, but would confine himself to conducting perhaps a cycle of Wagnerian opera—as he has done at Bayreuth for several years. This past season, Toscanini refused to go to Bayreuth, thus making a protest against the Hitler regime.

6 Women Elected To House Offices

Mrs. O'Day New Feminine Democrat; One Beaten.

The victory of Mrs. Virginia Jenckes, Democrat, over Fred Purnell, Republican, in Indiana, gives the House of Representatives six women members next session.

The last session started with the same number, but Mrs. Marian Clarke, who filled out her late husband's term and did not stand for reelection, increased the list to seven.

One new feminine Democrat will be on the scene—Mrs. Caroline O'Day, New Yorker, for whom Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt campaigned. One former woman Democrat will be missing, Mrs. Kathryn O'Loughlin McCarthy, defeated in Kansas.

Reelected were: Democrats, Mary T. Norton, New Jersey, and Isabella Greenway, Arizona; Republicans, Florence P. Kahn, of California, and Edith Nourse Rogers, of Massachusetts.

Morgenthau Sees Bootlegging Wane

A steady decrease in bootlegging during the last four months was reported yesterday by Secretary Morgenthau, the Associated Press says.

He said this was indicated by increasing Federal liquor revenues, larger sales in State-owned stores and higher prices for illicit alcohol.

Disclosing that 87 per cent of alcohol tax criminal cases handled by the Federal courts between July 1 and October 1 had resulted in convictions, Morgenthau said the attitude of the courts was an important factor in the campaign to make the entire liquor industry yield taxes.

Questioned as to the public cooperation in the war on bootleggers, Morgenthau said:

Parkway Work To Start Soon

To Begin When Virginia Obtains Required Rights-of-Way.

The park service said yesterday, according to the Associated Press, that it is ready to advertise for construction bids on the first 10 miles of the Shenandoah-Great Smoky parkway as soon as Virginia obtains required rights-of-way.

The first leg of the 400-mile parkway will be built from near the south end of Shenandoah National Park in Virginia to Blowing Rock, N. C. The 200-odd-mile stretch to Blowing Rock has been chosen definitely, but the remainder to Great Smoky Mountain National Park in North Carolina and Tennessee still is undecided.

The Government is asking from the States absolute title to 1,000 feet of right-of-way or absolute title to 200 feet and "a scenic easement" on 400-foot strips on either side. The easement would permit the park service to control signs and other possible scenic obstructions.

The park service said that within 30 to 40 days of Virginia's obtaining the right-of-way, actual construction could start. State engineering parties, under supervision of public roads bureau engineers, now are locating in detail the road south from Shenandoah Park.

Husband a Film Foe, Beauty Divorces Him

Los Angeles, Nov. 8 (AP).—Kathleen Burke, 21-year-old Chicago girl who entered the movies by winning a national contest, obtained a divorce today from Glenn N. Rardin. She charged mental cruelty.

"He said every one in Hollywood was a moron, and if I remained in pictures I would be a moron, too," she testified. "He wanted to take me to an Oregon farm, away from films forever. He thought a woman's place was in the home."

Methodists Fix Final Services For Centenary

Celebration Will End With Church Reception at Charlottesville.

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.). The final program for the centennial celebration of the First Methodist Church of this city, as announced today, provides for two sermons next Sunday by Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon, of Charlotte, N. C., presiding bishop of the Virginia Conference.

Monday night's program will be given over to an address of welcome by Dr. Wilson Gee, professor of rural economics and rural sociology at the University of Virginia; the church's history, by A. L. Bennett, superintendent of Albemarle County schools; words of greeting by former pastors and former presiding elders of the Charlottesville district, among them Dr. J. W. Moore, of Richmond; Dr. H. P. Myers, of Lynchburg; the Rev. C. C. Bell, of Newport News; Dr. W. T. Waterfield, of Hampton; Dr. M. S. Colonna, of Farmville, and Dr. Thomas F. Carroll, and fraternal greetings from representatives from local churches.

On Tuesday night Bishop Collins Denny, of Richmond, an alumnus of the University of Virginia and former chaplain at that institution, will preach, and Wednesday night will be given over to the work of the women of the church, with an appropriate sermon by Dr. H. P. Myers, of Centenary Church, Lynchburg, under whose leadership the present church building, one of the finest within the bounds of the Southern Methodist Church, was erected ten years ago.

The centennial celebration will close with a reception to be held in the social room of the church.

The church history, compiled by the centennial committee of the First Church, reveals that the Methodists had churches in Albemarle County before the establishment of the Charlottesville Church in 1834. The first was built near White Hall in 1788, while in 1795 the church known as "Austin's Meeting House," and later as Bingham's Church, was erected. Others were located at Ivy Creek, Temple Hill and at Midway Church, near Batesville.

Prior to 1824 Charlottesville, then a village, was not only irreligious but anti-religious. Dr. Conrad Spence, a noted divine, attempted to preach in the courthouse in the year 1818, but almost failed because of the bad light and bad boys. He was so shocked at the wickedness of the place that he remarked to a friend: "When Satan promised all the kingdoms of the world to Christ he laid his thumb on Charlottesville and whispered, 'Except this place, which I reserve for my own special use.'"

Sunday in those days was not kept with any degree of sanctity. Every store was open, as it was the great trading day for servants. Whiskey, then retailing at 60 cents a gallon, was freely dispensed to every purchaser.

Duncan Smith Dies In Charlottesville; Was Noted Painter

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 8 (AP).—Duncan Smith, noted artist, died today at the University Hospital, where he had been a patient since late in August. He was 58 and had been ill of a lung infection for nearly two years.

Youngest son of the late Francis H. Smith, physics professor at the University of Virginia, the artist attended the university before studying art in Rome and New York. His better-known works include murals in the Southern Railway Building in Washington, the Du Pont Hotel in Wilmington, Del., and the Ochs memorial at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Surviving are his wife, the former Miss Alice Coleman Nelson, of Richmond; two sisters, Mrs. Charles W. Kent, of the university, and Mrs. Carrington Harrison, of Danville, and a brother, Admiral George Tucker Smith, U. S. N., retired, of the university.

Rev. J. M. Lacy to Head County Red Cross Unit

Elkins, W. Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.). The Rev. J. MacD. Lacy, pastor of the Davis Memorial Prestbyterian Church, was named chairman of the Randolph County Chapter of the American Red Cross at the annual election of officers yesterday afternoon at the Y. M. C. A. The Rev. Mr. Lacy has served in former years in this capacity and is well acquainted with the work of the chapter.

Other officers elected were the Rev. Sherwood Funk, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, vice chairman; Miss Hallie Martin, reelected secretary; Clay B. Whitesell, reelected treasurer, and Mrs. B. M. Hoover, reelected chairman of the home service division.

Pal of Walker Sent Corsages, Not a Car, Says Mrs. Vanderbilt

Mrs. Whitney Must Have Child-Raising Mania, She Declares.

New York, Nov. 8 (AP).—Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt wound up more than a week on the witness stand in Supreme Court today by declaring Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney "must have a mania for raising children."

With the sixth week of the prolonged trial over the custody of little Gloria Vanderbilt drawing to a close, the case became mysterious again when almost every one except the principals and their lawyers was excluded from the courtroom.

Press and public were barred early in the trial, but at the afternoon session the retinue of friends and relatives surrounding Mrs. Vanderbilt also was shut out. Prince Gottfried Zu Hohenlohe, Mrs. Benjamin Thaw, jr., sister of Mrs. Vanderbilt; Harry Hays Morgan, her brother, and others went to an adjoining room and sat there all afternoon.

Justice John F. Carew disclosed later he had ordered the relatives out so Mrs. Vanderbilt could testify "with more comfort and peace of mind," and "to get it finished."

She testified with some heat, it was learned, angrily denying that A. C. Blumenthal, theatrical producer and Jimmie Walker's pal, had presented her with a $4,000 limousine. She insisted he only sent flowers.

"I never did anything wrong in my life," she exclaimed in answer to another question. Witnesses for Mrs. Whitney, who seeks the custody of Gloria on the ground that Mrs. Vanderbilt is an unfit mother, have accused her of drinking too much, neglecting her child, and being intimate with Prince Hohenlohe.

Asked what motive except that of the child's good she could attribute to Mrs. Whitney, who already has eight grandchildren around her, Mrs. Vanderbilt answered, "She must have a mania for child-raising."

LYDIA E. PINKHAM and Her Great Grandchildren

IF Lydia E. Pinkham were alive today she would be 115 years old. She was born in Lynn, Massachusetts in 1819, the year of Queen Victoria's birth. She was the mother of four sons and one daughter. Her descendants still continue to manufacture her Vegetable Compound and other medicines and the integrity of four generations is behind the products.

More than 700,000 American women have written in to say, "Your Vegetable Compound helps me." They take it before and after childbirth, at the Change, or whenever they feel weak, nervous and rundown. They give it to their daughters and they recommend it to their neighbors.

Any medicine which benefits so many other women must be good. Let it help you, too.

TABLETS, TOO! Many women like the convenience of Lydia E. Pinkham's Tablets. They relieve and prevent periodic pain and discomfort. Take them regularly and, if yours is not a surgical case, you can probably escape periodic upsets. New purse size package—50¢ at all drug stores.

D. C. Students Talk of Strike In Grid Fight

Group to Call En Masse on Board Today to Offer Protest.

erning body; Betty Turner, vice president; Gene Eveler, secretary; Lieut. Col. Spanton, of the McKinley cadets; Holmes ("Blackie") Heatwole, McKinley grid captain, and Doris Gamble, president of the Girls' Reserve.

On top of this came an announcement from the National Student League that a delegation of high school students and alumni was being organized to present the student point of view at the board meeting today, carrying with it petitions signed by more than 1,000 students protesting the football series concellation.

The delegation, the announcement said, will ask to be excused from classes to attend the meeting.

Vandalism Condemned.

The league, an organization of high school and college students "to protect the rights of students," condemned what it called "the vandalism that has accompanied the case," but added:

"Our student government has been made a farce. The riot at the football game was a matter for the students to deal with as well as the administration, but our regularly elected representatives should be consulted and be a part of the disciplinary committee."

Today's meeting of the board, a continuation of Wednesday's session, at which the whole question of football schedule cancellation was reopened, will be in the nature of a trial. All individuals who had any connection with events on the playing field that led to the riot and subsequent proceedings of school officials, including the game referee and umpire, will be called on to give testimony.

Although making it clear that the meeting was to be open in every respect, Charles Degges, secretary of the board, said it would be confined to taking the testimony of only those associated with the incident, barring extraneous discussion.

"Terrible Thing," He Says.

Dr. Hayden Johnson, president of the board, who will question the witnesses, discounted the likelihood of the Kramer demonstration affecting the board's decision.

"That was a terrible thing to do," he said, "and I can't understand it. But I feel and I believe the board will agree that the entire student body should not be made to suffer for the actions of a few."

All members of the board reached last night warmly praised Dr. Kramer, describing him as an excellent official, devoted to the interest of the students. But some of them were not so certain that Wednesday night's protest riot had not prejudiced them against the students. Here is what a few of them had to say:

Dr. Johnson—"You never can estimate how far a thing like that will influence one subconsciously."

Henry T. Quinn—"This thing has caused me to give very serious consideration to the whole question. It puts it in a terrible light. I don't believe it should be passed over lightly."

George M. Whitwell—"They ought to know that was not the way to get what they want. The incident left a very unfavorable impression on me. I was very anxious to help before. There was no excuse for it. Of course, I want to hear all the facts."

Wants Games Played.

Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle—"I haven't made up my mind at all."

Henry Gilligan—"As far as I am concerned, this thing has had no effect on my attitude. It was unfortunate. I am very sorry. I can't understand it. I think Kramer is a fine fellow, wise, smart and capable, everything a public official should be. But what I feel about Dr. Kramer has nothing to do with football. I think the games should be played."

Dr. J. Hayden Johnson—"It was a nasty occurrence. I haven't made up my mind."

Dr. Kramer disclaimed personal responsibility both for himself and Dr. Ballou for the action that canceled the grid schedule. He said the Board of Principals adopted the cancellation resolution without a dissenting vote; that it was made because crowds at several games this fall had become unmanagable. He declined to name the official responsible for the resolution's introduction. He said he would accept the board's verdict "cheerfully."

Students Apologize for Demonstration

Ballou, the superintendent, to apologize for the demonstration in front of Dr. Kramer's home Wednesday night. Left, Frank Daniel, McKinley principal. Right, Dr. Ballou.

New Farm Plan To Be Offered

(Associated Press.)

The creation of a permanent farm credit system as powerful as the Federal Reserve and stripped of all private profit will be proposed to the next Congress, by Chairman Jones (Democrat), Texas, of the House Agriculture Committee, as the key log of a farm legislative program. The Texan disclosed the plan in its general outlines yesterday, but said details remained to be worked out.

Essentially, the set-up would be broad enough to afford permanent credit facilities to agriculture in all its operations—credit to be given at cost, plus a fractional charge to build up a reserve and protect against losses.

The system would be operated through the existing Farm Credit Administration. It would be empowered to issue currency—farm credit notes similar to Federal Reserve notes—and thus to save the interest charges resulting in financing through bonds.

It would make use of existing facilities of intermediate credit banks, the Production Credit Corporation and Land Banks.

The money to start the Farm Reserve system, Jones added, would come either by earmarking gold now held in the Treasury or by direct appropriation of Congress. He declined to estimate how much would be needed.

He said the exact rate of interest to the farmer under the proposal had not been determined, but that it probably would not be more than 3½ per cent.

Powerful backing for the plan already had been obtained. Actual drafting of the bill will not begin until after further conferences with Administration leaders.

Ambassador Gibson Sails for Visit to U. S.

Rio de Janeiro, Nov. 8 (AP).—United States Ambassador Hugh S. Gibson sailed for the United States today.

The Ambassador planned to spend two weeks in Washington, after which he will go to Europe for several months' vacation. He will return to Washington before coming back to Rio de Janeiro. Mrs. Gibson is now in Belgium.

111 Prisoners Are Locked Out; Atlanta Loses New Jail's Key

City's Guests Have to Go Back to Their Old, Dark Cells.

Atlanta, Nov. 8 (AP).—Bronze-faced policemen turned pink, then vermillion, then scarlet, then crimson.

A hundred and eleven prisoners looked out of jail!

The situation was unprecedented. Atlanta, with two city bastiles, and not a key for the new one.

Chief of Police T. O. Sturdivant, dressed in his finest, with gold badge shining, ordered prisoners herded and marched into the new jail.

After 40 years in the old building, the police department was all set to take up a new home with all modern conveniences.

It was 10:35. Turnkey L. D. Cody: "Who's got the keys?"

10:36—Assistant Turnkey W. D. Scott: "I haven't got them, have you?"

10:55—Turnkey Cody reported his assistant found a man who knew the man who knew where the keys probably might be found.

11:05—Search for keys went on.

11:26—Prisoners marched back to old, dark cells, keenly disappointed.

Oklahoma Bank Is Robbed.

Okeene, Okla., Nov. 8 (AP).—Three men, one identified by the bank president as Raymond Hamilton, Texas desperado, robbed the First National Bank of Okeene of $1,000 today and escaped in a flurry of shot.

Greater Farm Income Needed, Wallace Finds

One-Fourth of U. S. Gain Must Go to Growers, He Declares.

New York, Nov. 8 (AP).—No matter how much the National income increases, Secretary Wallace declared tonight, one-fourth of the gain must go into farmers' pockets or the higher level can not be maintained.

Speaking before the Agricultural Conference of Northeastern States, he analyzed the status of farm income in relation to national income, and stated his belief that continuation of recovery depends on a larger proportion of the total than heretofore going to food producers.

"Farmers will have a fair share of the national income when their share is sufficient to maintain a flow of production in balance with their needs of a maximum consumption, to provide for decent human living, and to achieve these ends without impoverishing the soil," he said.

Exactly what this share may be is impossible to determine, the Secretary added, but at present it is probably around 9½ per cent. On the basis of past relationships it should be about 13 per cent, although, he added, "I am not inferring that the farm share of the national income in the past has been fair" or adequate to provide the principles named.

If the national income should rise from $50,000,000,000 per year to about $70,000,000,000 and "if that level of national income is to be maintained and made practicable" the farm share of that gain must be $5,000,000,000, the Secretary figured.

"Such an increase in farm income will mean, as it has meant during the last year, less urban unemployment by virtue of an increased rural demand and purchasing power for urban goods," Wallace said. "It may mean higher prices for some products, but it will also mean larger incomes with which to pay the higher prices * * *."

He expressed a doubt of complete success unless farm production is controlled or coordinated, since higher farm prices again would invite overproduction and new price depressions.

Norris Silent on Sinclair Plea.

Beaver City, Nebr., Nov. 8 (AP). Senator George W. Norris today declined to comment on a telegram of Upton Sinclair requesting an investigation of the California election until he received and studied the request.

Dean of Chicago Jurists Marries His Secretary

Chicago, Nov. 8 (AP).—Judge Marcus A. Kavanagh, 75, dean of Chicago's jurists, entrained today for a honeymoon in New Orleans with his 26-year-old secretary, the former Miss Jeanne Latour, of St. Louis. The judge and his secretary were married at 8 a. m.

Judge Kavanagh has been on the bench for 49 years, mostly in Chicago civil and criminal courts. In his court in 1911, fingerprints first were used in the conviction of a murderer.

General Staff Rule Over Air Corps Upheld

Defense of the new system, whereby the General Staff supervises the Army Air Corps, was presented to the President's policy-forming aviation commission yesterday by Maj. Gen. Robert E. Callan, assistant chief of staff, the Associated Press reports.

Callan, part of whose testimony behind closed doors was summarized by Chairman Clark Howell, sr., insisted that it was necessary for the General Staff to exercise control over all Army activities.

GEORGE WASHINGTON SEES AMERICA'S FIRST FLAG RAISED

A century and a half before, America was a wilderness. The law spoke with bullets, tomahawks and whip lashes. On the eastern coast, a narrow fringe of settlements was forcing its way inland. A century and a half later, the wilderness had been strangled, the flag was recognized all over the world as the symbol of a great power. What lay between? What story of sacrifice, of struggle and sacrifice was written in bold, inspiring letters in that span of time? Here is one of the greatest dramas of civilization. Now it is told as drama—in dramatic and vivid pictures.

Freight Boost For Seafoods Held Too High

I. C. C. Examiners Advise Carriers' Proposal be Ruled Out.

Seafood merchants from Southern and Eeastern States won yesterday the opening skirmish in their fight before the Interstate Commerce Commission against higher freight rates, the Associated Press reported.

Two examiners, R. L. Shanafelt and W. R. Brennan, made a report to the commission declaring the proposed increase was unjustified and recommending the commission rule it out.

The new schedule, which the carriers propose to put into effect January 7, covers fresh fish shipments from Delaware, Maryland and Virginia to points in Southern territory, and fish and other seafoods, such as shrimp, shipped from Southern States to Eastern destinations.

The examiners reported to the commission that in some instances the change in rates would not be unreasonbale, but that the proposed accompanying change in the icing rules would make the total charge excessively high.

"From a consideration of all the facts of record," the report said, "it is apparent that the seafood industry is unable at this time to sustain the full burden of the proposed increases, although apparently the industry is agreeable to some increase in the charges."

National City Bank Rewards Spanish Army

Madrid, Nov. 8 (AP).—The Association of Foreign Banks in Spain, including the National City Bank of New York, today subscribed 100,000 pesetas ($13,600) to a national fund to reward the armed forces who suppressed the recent rebellion. The National Telephone Co. gave a similar amount.

The government issued a statement of official thanks for the loyalty of the telephone company employes during their recent heavy work through the rebellion when, in many cases, they were under fire.

The Story of A Colonel and His Lady

...and the tradition behind America's finest whiskies

Both Four Roses and Paul Jones had romantic beginnings. And today both are true to the tradition that inspired them. They are made by the costly, old-fashioned method—they are naturally aged in U. S. bonded warehouses—and they're blends of all straight whiskies!

IN the Spring of 1865, a Confederate officer turned homeward from the battlefields. His family's fortune was gone, lost with the cause he fought for.

In the Southland he established a still. He began making the kind of whiskey American gentlemen had always demanded—rich, full-bodied, American whiskey.

Before long, the whiskey he made had won an honored place on the sideboards of the nation ... its name, like the name of its maker, was Paul Jones.

Four Roses and Paul Jones have the full, rich, hearty flavor that has always been demanded by Americans who know their whiskey.

Years later, a descendant of Colonel Paul Jones decided to bring forth another brand. And he remembered a story ... how, in the days before the Civil War, a lovely lady had signified her acceptance of the Colonel's courtship by wearing to a cotillion a corsage of four red roses.

And so Four Roses came into being—a whiskey as fine, and soon as famous, as its companion, Paul Jones.

Still true to a great tradition

Frankfort Distilleries—the company which makes Four Roses and Paul Jones today—is owned and operated by the descendants of the old Colonel. And Frankfort is proud to say that these whiskies are made by the same method the Colonel used—made the only way truly great whiskey can be made—by the costly, old-fashioned method of allowing grain to ferment slowly, naturally.

For Frankfort knows that in no other way can it safeguard its reputation of producing America's finest whiskies. In no other way can it give Four Roses and Paul Jones the full, hearty flavor that America has come to expect in these fine old brands.

Kentucky for Bourbon—Maryland for Rye

You can make whiskey anywhere. But only in Kentucky and Maryland can you find the limestone water that's necessary to give whiskey the robust richness it should have. So Frankfort Distilleries make Four Roses and Paul Jones, and all their other whiskies, exclusively in these two States.

Four Roses and Paul Jones are naturally aged in charred oak barrels in U. S. bonded warehouses under the world's most rigid government supervision. And they're all whiskey when you buy them—blends of straight whiskies! Yet they cost no more than whiskies that aren't.

Test them against all comers!

Compare Four Roses and Paul Jones with any other whiskey. Try them straight—and discover how much richer and heartier these Frankfort brands are. Try Four Roses and Paul Jones in mixed drinks—and learn how wonderful these American drinks can be when they're made as they were intended to be made—with fine, old-fashioned American whiskey!

Be sure to try these other Frankfort Whiskies!

OLD OSCAR PEPPER—An old-fashioned whiskey at an old-fashioned price—known to connoisseurs since 1838. SHIPPING PORT—The best straight whiskey at so low a price—smooth and mellow. WOLF CREEK—A fine, straight, naturally aged Rye at a low price.

Siamese Fete In Limelight On Busy Day

Envoy Has Celebration in Honor of King's Anniversary.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The season is on, and yesterday afternoon, Capital society had a taste of what the winter will be, trying to do three things at once. The Minister of Siam and Princess Damras entertained at a large reception and tea in celebration of the birthday anniversary of His Majesty, King Prajadhipok; the Minister of the Union of South Africa and Mrs. Ralph Close entertained at a large cocktail party in farewell to the Secretary of the Legation, Mr. Eugene Scallan, and the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt received at the Sulgrave Club the officers and their wives who are stationed in and near Washington.

Flock to Siamese Legation.

Diplomats in great numbers attended the first two affairs, most of them going to the Siamese Legation first to pay their respects to the representatives of the King of Siam, who with the Queen is now traveling in Europe, and is expected to come to this country in the near future.

The legation, a handsome residence in the smart Kalorama Circle neighborhood, was at one time the Brazilian Embassy, and has been redecorated to suit the needs of the present occupants. Crimson carpets on the staircase, crimson velour draperies in the halls, and in the drawing room hangings of a softer shade of crimson damask.

Regrets at Departure.

The retiring Minister of Greece and Mme. Simopoulos, who will leave December 1 on the Olympic for the former's new post in London, received expressions of deep regret from all sides, Mme. Simopoulos, in smart black trimmed with beaver, exclaiming that she is torn between the pleasant prospect of returning to her native England and her regret in leaving Washington, where in the past ten years she has made a host of friends who are showing their reluctance to let this popular couple leave by entertaining them morning, noon and night until their ship sails.

The Minister and Princess Damras were assisted in receiving by their young daughter, who wore a white satin tunic with a black velvet skirt, and looked like a miniature with her sleek dark hair.

Prochniks in Evidence.

The Minister of Austria and Mme. Prochnik were present, charming and gracious, but without their debutante daughter, Miss Valerie Prochnik.

The Solicitor General and Mrs. J. Crawford Biggs were accompanied by their niece, Miss Margaret Burgess, of Norfolk, Va., who is spending the winter with them. Both Mrs. Biggs and her niece chose velvet afternoon frocks for yesterday, the former in Alice blue with a hat to match, and Miss Burgess in hunters' green, with a small turban.

Mme. de Laboulaye, wife of the Ambassador of France, who has been wearing smart black in the official mourning for the late Foreign Minister of France, wore an ensemble of tete de negre brown trimmed with Persian lamb of the same shade, and a hat to match. The Minister of Portugal and Mme. de Bianchi were accompanied by the latter's daughter, Mlle. Sibilla Skidelsky.

Many Others Present.

There were many more who poured into the legation, but the early arrivals left to attend the tea at the South African Legation and to bid bon voyage to Mr. Scallan, who leaves today at noon for New York, whence he will sail at midnight aboard the Bremen for Europe. He will go to Paris and there will meet Mr. Eric Louw, recently appointed Minister to France. Mr. Louw was the first South African Minister in Washington and Mr. Scallan preceded him to this post to open a legation. He will perform the same duty in Paris and then will go to Lisbon, where he will inaugurate a new legation, of which he will be in charge.

The number of guests who went to say goodbye to this popular bachelor was incredible; old and young lamented his departure, and the dining and drawing rooms of the legation were filled with guests until long after the hour of 7. Mrs. Close, wearing an afternoon gown of black crepe trimmed with metallic embroidery, received her guests in a charming and informal manner, and for the most part moved from one room to another greeting everybody, while the minister followed the same course.

Notables in Attendance.

Among the guests, besides many of those seen at the Siamese Legation, were the former Ambassador to Chile and Mrs. William S. Culbertson, Mrs. Elonzo Tyner, in black trimmed with ermine, and beautiful paradise feathers in her hat, with her daughter, Miss Peggy Tyner, who wore a gray frock with a scarf of apple-green velvet and quite the most enormous beret seen this season to match; Rear Admiral and Mrs. Mark L. Bristol, the Commercial Counselor of the British Embassy and Mrs. H. O. Chalkley, the Commercial Secretary of the Embassy, Mr. Leander McCormick-Goodhart; the Charge d'Affaires of Czechoslovakia, Dr. Josef Neemecek; Miss Olivia Stokes, wearing gray trimmed with dark red; Miss Marvin Breckinridge, Mrs. Celeste Crosby Miller, Mrs. Chester A. Snow, jr., wearing a black velvet hat, and a coat trimmed with mink; Miss Irene Boyle, also in black; Miss Laura Tuckerman in a frock of velveteen in a deep shade of orange, with a brown fur coat, and Miss Ruth Tuckerman in deep red.

Mrs. Richard Potts Will Give Luncheon.

Mrs. Richard Potts will entertain at luncheon November 24 in honor of her debutante daughters, Miss Helen Caldwell Potts and Miss Anne Powell Potts. The luncheon will be given at the home of Mrs. Potts' nephew and niece, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Walker, at 3333 P street, in Georgetown.

Mr. and Mrs. William Jeffries Chewning, jr., will entertain at a large dinner in their home on Garfield street December 1 in honor of the Misses Potts, later taking their guests to the Black and White Ball at the Mayflower Hotel.

Navy and Marine Officers Honor Guests at Reception

Mrs. Claude A. Swanson and Henry Latrobe Roosevelts Are Hosts at Afternoon Dance Given at the Sulgrave Club.

Mrs. Claude A. Swanson, wife of the Secretary of the Navy, received with the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt at the reception and dance they gave yesterday afternoon from 4 until 7 o'clock at the Sulgrave Club to officers of the Navy and Marine Corps and their wives.

Also receiving with Col. and Mrs. Roosevelt were the chief of the Bureau of Navigation and Mrs. William D. Leahy, the Commandant of the Marine Corps and Mrs. John H. Russell.

Presiding at the tea table were Mrs. Peoples, wife of Rear Admiral C. J. Peoples, paymaster general of the Navy; Mrs. Bloch, wife of Rear Admiral C. C. Bloch, Judge Advocate General of the Navy; Mrs. Brinser, wife of Rear Admiral H. L. Brinser, director of shore establishments of the Navy; Mrs. Defrees, wife of Rear Admiral Joseph R. Defrees, Commandant of the Navy Yard; Mrs. Land, wife of Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, chief constructor of the Navy; Mrs. Matthews, wife of Brig. Gen. Hugh Matthews, quartermaster of the Marine Corps; Mrs. McDougal, wife of Brig. Gen. Douglas C. McDougal, assistant to the Commandant of the Marine Corps, and Mrs. Porter, wife of Brig. Gen. David D. Porter, adjutant and inspector of the Marine Corps.

Also assisting the hosts were Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Dall and Miss Eleanor K. Roosevelt, daughter of Col. and Mrs. Roosevelt, who had a few of her friends. Others assisting were Mrs. Kays, wife of Capt. Herbert E. Kays; Mrs. Monroe, wife of Commander Monroe, naval aid to Col. Roosevelt; Mrs. Fechteler, wife of Lieut. Comdr. William M. Fechteler, nephew of Mrs. Roosevelt, and Mrs. John W. Thomason, jr., wife of Capt. Thomason, jr., Marine aid to Col. Roosevelt.

Eloise Hopkins Becomes Bride In Maryland

The wedding of Miss Eloise Hopkins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ward Hopkins, to Mr. Thomas Glover, son of Mr. Warren Irving Glover and of the late Mrs. Glover, took place last evening at 8:15 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents in Woodside Park, Md.

The house was decorated with Southern smilax and tall white baskets containing white chrysanthemums banked before a background of palms. The aisle to the improvised altar was roped off with clusters of smilax. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Ralph D. Smith.

Wears Old Ivory Satin.

Mr. Hopkins gave his daughter in marriage. She was wearing a gown of old ivory satin made on princess lines with tight-fitting sleeves ending in points at the wrists. The neckline was low and square in the front and buttoned high in the back. The flaring skirt terminated in an oval train. Her hip length veil of tulle was caught into a Juliet cap of lace edged with satin braid and she carried a lace handkerchief which was a family heirloom. Her colonial bouquet was of lilies of the valley and rosebuds.

Miss Mary Georgia Hopkins was the bride's only attendant. She wore an off the shoulder model of green taffeta, the train of which was edged with puffings of the taffeta.

Mr. Warren Irving Glover, jr., served his brother as best man.

Following the ceremony there was a reception. Mrs. Hopkins was wearing an ensemble of sapphire blue velvet with a spray of gardenias.

Later, when Mr. Glover and his bride left on their wedding trip, the latter had on a smart black suit trimmed with kolinsky and a tailored blouse of lame. Her black hat was of Cossack fashion and trimmed with a band of kolinsky. Her accessories were of black suede.

Mrs. Letts Will Give Luncheon for Niece

Mrs. F. Dickinson Letts, wife of Justice Letts, will entertain at a luncheon on Friday, November 30, for her niece, Miss Dorothy Haney Letts, when the guests will be this season's debutantes.

Miss Letts, who is attending the Connecticut College for Women at New London, will arrive in Washington on November 28 for the holiday. She will be presented to society at a tea dance at the Mayflower during the Christmas holidays.

William Phillips Host To Party at Concert

The Undersecretary of State, Mr. William Phillips, entertained at dinner last evening when his guests were the Ambassador of Brazil and Senhora de Aranha, Mr. and Mrs. James Clement Dunn and Mrs. Nathan C. Wyeth. Later they attended the concert given by the Philadelphia Symphony, with Leopold Stokowski conducting, and Serge Rachmaninoff as guest artist.

Mrs. Roosevelt occupied her box at the concert last evening, having with her a group of guests.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

Two very busy women were Connecticut avenueing yesterday morning despite the scowling skies. Betty Marsh, in green and tweed with unique gold clips at the neck, parked right smack in the middle of the whizzing traffic and no one minded. Mary Kay Spinks, in mustard and brown, was thrilled about today, when she will make her debut at the Mayflower. The party is also in celebration of something else—because as the guests pause to pass the time ob'day they will also say . . . "Happy birthday, Mary Kay!"

National U. Law Prom on Saturday

The annual senior prom of the National University Law School will be held in the west ballroom of the Shoreham Saturday at 10 p. m. Friends of the university, as well as members of the class, are invited.

Mr. John S. Wynn is chairman of the dance committee. Officers of the senior class are Mr. Bowman MacArthur, president; Miss Helen Goodner, vice president; Miss Kathryn Rhea, secretary; Mr. Odin Klovstad, treasurer, and Mr. James Ewen, sergeant at arms.

Miss Anna McGowan has moved to Wardman Park Hotel, where she has taken an apartment.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Does End of Love Justify Man in Asking Wife for Divorce?

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: If a man has fully decided he no longer loves the woman he is married to, but does love another woman, what is the right thing to do? To insist on a divorce and marry the woman he loves, or continue to live with his wife?

* * * * *

Ten years ago I married a nice girl I had known since boyhood. We have three children. My wife and I have never had a great deal in common, outside of our background of mutual friends, our home and children and that first attraction which drew us together, but which both of us have long since outgrown. I am convinced my wife doesn't really care any more about me than I do for her, but she's settled down into the habit of marriage, takes it as a matter of course that we will just go on living together until we die.

* * * *

This other woman is the one I should have waited for. She isn't pretty. She isn't a woman who would be attractive to the average man, either. I realize that fully. But she's the only woman in the world for me. She's brilliant, sympathetic, imaginative. She has the visionary's courage to be unconventional. But she's puritanical, if I may call it that, in keeping faith with her individual standard of ethics.

* * * *

Since meeting her, I have been challenged to give my life some definite shape and purpose, not just drift along in aimless lethargy. It would mean tearing my life up by the roots, I realize. Facing the criticism of society, deeding away most of my property, the lion's share of my income, probably sustaining some professional loss. But I would be willing to risk that. So would the woman I love.

* * * *

But what about the woman I'm married to? I haven't dared to discuss it with her yet. I'm afraid she'd resort to hysterics, recriminations, reproaches, pleading for the children's sake as well as her own. I want to be as fair as humanly possible to all concerned, and therefore feel that my wishes and those of the woman I love should be counterbalanced by the opinion of an unprejudiced third party. I have thought you might be the person to provide that angle.

What have you got to say?

STRANGER.

Direct Answer Difficult.

DEAR STRANGER: Without knowing your wife's estimate of her's and the children's contribution to your life, nor her evaluation of what you mean to her and the children, it is impossible to give an opinion on the situation with any great degree of objectivity.

* * * *

However, I know that character—in it's definition of moral excellence—is an absolute essential for leading a life which has value either to the individual or to society. And I know that character precludes the shedding of old responsibilities just because the appeal of novelty has worn off.

* * * *

I know no human being is ever so strong he does not feel recurrent need to lean heavily on the arm of another's intuitive sympathy, understanding and inspirational belief. But I know the strongest spirits, to whom others turn in times of material, spiritual or emotional crisis, are those who have learned to carry their very burden with a measure of discipline and self-containment.

* * * *

What has drawn you to the woman you love is her spiritual and intellectual strength, no doubt.

Would you be developing strength or pandering weakness, in discarding the woman comparatively lacking these qualities and seeking to possess, vicariously, these qualities in the person of another woman? Or would it make for greater growth of character, to develop these irresistible, sustaining qualities in your own being; to possess them in your own right?

* * * *

It seems to me there is no possibility of dealing fairly with all the persons concerned in this triangle. Some are to be sacrificed: either your wife and children on the one hand; or yourself and the woman you love, on the other.

It will take warrior courage, a rather hedonistic philosophy, to walk rough shod and unhearing over the weaker creature, the helpless children, and it will take spiritual heroism, the ascetic's philosophy, to sacrifice your own and this woman's love on the altar of moral duty.

* * * *

The type of man you essentially are will determine the choice you eventually make.

M. H.

Ancient Egyptians Lost Teeth at 50

The foods used by the early Egyptians were so abrasive that, although the people were racially endowed with beautifully formed teeth, the teeth were usually worn off at the age of 35 and at 50 were almost gone.

These facts have been ascertained by a careful study of 230 skulls of ancient Egyptians among the collections of the University of California Museum of Anthropology by Dr. R. Wood Leigh.

In no case, Dr. Leigh reported, did he find any evidence of surgical treatment of diseased teeth. Even tooth pulling seems to have been unknown.

Welfare Work As a Sideline Is Disparaged

Analysis of Talents Is Urged for Volunteers by Miss Tousley.

THE VOLUNTEER who goes in for social service work because it is "the thing to do" is a nuisance.

Miss Claire Tousley, of the Charity Organization Society of New York City, tossed these electrifying words calmly into the silence of the deserted ballroom at the Mayflower yesterday afternoon. A few minutes before that room had been filled with Washington junior leaguers who had gathered to hear her speak on "The Volunteer Carries On."

"But," she continued, "the volunteer who is serious about her work, who analyzes her talents, and does the job for which she is best fitted is an invaluable asset to a charity organization."

Miss Tousley came from New York to lecture at the closing session of the "Human Relations Institute" sponsored by the Washington Council of Social Agencies. Twenty years of working with volunteer social workers have given her a valuable perspective on this subject. And yesterday, her face glowing with enthusiasm, she outlined a constructive program of work and study for the volunteer social service worker.

Inventory First Step.

"It is just as silly to say all people are equipped to do social service work as it would be to say all people were fitted to be pianists or teachers," she said. "So the first thing the would-be volunteer worker should do is take an inventory of herself and find whether she is sincerely interested and has the necessary qualifications.

"If she finds she has, she should go to a good social worker who will deal with her honestly and realistically and begin her work. It is important that she be willing to start as a buck private and learn the work from the bottom up. The trouble with most volunteer workers is that they are content to be window dressing."

The girl who is serious about social service work will take courses in sociology, will be willing to do hard, practical work, Miss Tousley pointed out.

"But the most important thing the volunteer worker must learn," she said, "is to concentrate on one phase of work. The girl who scatters her energies all over the place never really accomplishes anything, never learns anything.

Three Contributions.

"She is trying to untie a knot by starting in the middle instead of taking hold of one end and pulling."

There are three unique contributions which the volunteer worker can make to social service, Miss Tousley pointed out.

"First of all, she can do work the professional worker hasn't time to do," she explained. "For instance, the professional worker will see that a child gets medical attention he needs, but she can not give the child personal sympathy and care because she hasn't time. That is where the volunteer worker is invaluable. Then social work should be a partnership between the intelligent lay citizen and the professional worker. And the volunteer can interpret the facts to other people. Thirdly the staff morale is improved by the knowledge that the volunteer workers make a second line of defense in times of stress."

"What all social workers today need is the ability to be realists. We have to face facts, and when we do we will find them tough but interesting."

Bloused Silhouette Returns.

The bloused silhouette is being shown more than ever this season. Shirrings and smockings in bodices are important in gaining the bloused line which is introduced in yokes and sections.

High Honors Won by Women in State Races; 2 Named Secretary of State and 2 Treasurer

MRS. RHODA FOX GRAVES, Republican, was the first woman reported elected to the New York State Senate.

MRS. ELIZABETH FAYETTE GONZALES, mother of 11 children, who won the important office of secretary of state in New Mexico, on the Democratic ticket.

MRS. MYRTLE P. ENKING, Democratic incumbent, was re-elected to the office of State treasurer in Idaho.

By Mary Greiner Kelly.

WOMEN barely held their own in the national election. But candidates who crashed the field for State offices carried off some brand-new victories. Two women won the important office of secretary of State and two State treasurer. State Senates throughout the country boast an increased feminine quota for next year, and several State commissioner posts will be held by women.

Mrs. Alex Miller, of Iowa, colorful Democratic secretary of State, whose campaign for a second term was based upon her record of having wiped out a State deficit of over $180,000 in two years, was reelected. Mrs. Miller was accredited during her first term of having inaugurated a State highway safety system that won national acclaim.

Myrtle P. Enking, of Idaho, will be a second termer in the office of State treasurer, as will Myrtle Morrison, Democratic incumbent of South Dakota.

Mother of 11 Elected.

Standing unique among the victorious of New Mexico is Mrs. Elizabeth Fayette Gonzales, of Santa Fe, mother of 11 children, who won the office of secretary of State on the Democratic ticket. Carrying the field by a large majority, Mrs. Gonzales was deluged by congratulations yesterday. It is her first public office.

Of French, Irish and Spanish descent, New Mexico's new secretary of State is a vital and charming personality. She comes from a long line of pioneers who took a hand in the development of the Southwestern country. Enjoying a large acquaintance over the State, Mrs. Gonzales is said to have won with little or no campaigning, having been placed on the ticket by her party, following the withdrawal of Mrs. Esther Romero, regular nominee.

Mrs. Gonzales received her education in the schools of Santa Fe, where she was graduated from the Loretto Academy. She taught in the rural schools of her country for several years before her marriage to Leopoldo Gonzales, Spanish-American, 26 years ago.

In spite of the demands of a husband, a home and 11 children, Mrs. Gonzales managed to be active in civic welfare, educational and health work.

Prominent among Republican women who won places in the State contests is Mrs. Rhoda Fox Graves, the first woman ever elected to the New York State Senate. Having served with distinction in the Assembly for ten years, Mrs. Graves, who was a delegate at large from New York State to the Republican national convention in 1932, was declared a winner in the earliest election returns.

The distinctive office of commissioner of charities and correction in Oklahoma was again won by the "champion vote getter of them all," Mrs. Mabel Bassett, smiling grandmother, who is said to have the knack of rolling up the largest majorities of any candidate in her State. Mrs. Bassett, who campaigns by the method of personal calls, has filled this difficult and exacting State office with outstanding success for 12 years.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

High Blood Pressure.

THERE are several manifestations of high blood pressure that are fairly well understood. We recognize that increased blood pressure continuing over months or years may finally damage the kidneys and the heart muscle. We know something of the role of the adrenal glands in maintaining blood pressure; that when these glands are destroyed by disease blood pressure fails. Although the part played by the thyroid gland is not entirely understood, yet numerous instances are recorded of a sharp drop in pressure following the removal of this gland in exophthalmic goiter.

An excess amount of food protein has long been held responsible for increased arterial tension. Years ago protein starvation was advocated as the best plan of treatment. The patient was permitted no red meat and was limited to fish, eggs, and milk. Careful investigation has shown that protein from red meat has no more effect in raising the blood pressure than protein from any other source. Furthermore, protein starvation may lead, as was pointed out in an earlier article, to swelling of the tissues (edema).

Emotional difficulties play an exceedingly important part in the maintenance of high blood pressure. Business worries, family or marital difficulties, unhappiness from any cause, and sleeplessness are important factors. Every physician knows of numerous cases wherin relief from persistent worry has been followed by a return to normal blood pressure.

Overweight high blood pressure patients should reduce, after which the diet must be controlled and moderate exercise prescribed. Infections of the teeth, tonsils, sinuses and urinary tract are often responsible for nervous irritations, causing constriction of capillaries.

What Today Means

"Scorpio."

IF NOVEMBER 9 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11:15 a. m. to to 1:15 p. m., from 2:15 to 4:15 p. m., and from 6:15 to 8:15 p. m. The danger periods are from 9:15 to 11:15 a. m., from 4:15 to 6:15 p. m. and from 8:15 to 10:15 p. m.

If you are desirous to avoid being criticised on this date, be careful to do nothing that you know is indiscreet and will be likely to cause adverse comment.

There is a strong probability that you may have a pleasant reunion with an old acquaintance in an unexpected manner. There are excellent indications of money coming to you. Be cautious that a temptation to spend it foolishly is not allowed to sway your better judgment.

Married and engaged couples, as well as those anxious to make a trail that will lead to the altar, will show their wisdom if they refrain from assuming a dictatorial attitude on this date, and refrain from making an issue out of any trivial affair.

If a woman and November 9 is your natal day, plain speaking is an admirable trait if tempered with diplomacy. You, however, may be inclined to be a little too frank and outspoken for your own good. There are very few people who like hearing the truth if it relates to their shortcomings. You should be very fortunate in money matters.

Women Candidates Achieve Vindication by Valiant Fight For Real Issues in Election

By Malvina Lindsay

IF WOMEN did not take Jericho in the recent election, they at least made a valiant fight. For one thing they ventured more (97 were running for important offices), and for another they campaigned generally in a straight-from-the-shoulder fashion that was a credit to their sex. Probably less sex sentimentality entered into the campaign than any in which women have figured.

* * * *

With a few exceptions, the women candidates stood on their own feet. The prestige of deceased husbands, fathers or other male relatives was not invoked to win votes. The only women candidate who ran on a platform of vindication of her husband's policies—Mrs. William Langer, candidate for Governor of North Dakota—was defeated.

* * * *

Many of the 24 women candidates for Congress were representatives of third parties. They symbolized issues rather than personalities. Facing almost certain defeat, they demonstrated that their practical-minded, and even personal-minded, sex may possess a passion for abstraction, may have the courage to stand for a lost cause.

ONE OF the most significant signs of feminine advance in politics was the fact that the campaigns of the women candidates were based on economic rather than moral issues. The right-minded Mrs. Grundy was not in evidence either on the stump or at the polls.

* * * *

In the early days of woman suffrage—in fact, up until the depression—women voters and office seekers invariably saw political issues in the light of "right" or "wrong." A woman could scarcely be roused to any interest in an election unless she saw a chance to line up with the sheep against the goats. If prohibition, religion or morality in any form could be dragged into a campaign, a woman immediately lost interest in all other issues and became a blatant champion of righteousness. And women campaigners up to the present have been shrewd enough to take advantage of this predilection of their sex.

* * * *

Fighting their battles without the aid of emotionalism and by argument rather than exhortation, the women candidates received campaign training that should fit them the better for dispassionate office holding.

THE ELECTION also demonstrated that women have learned the give and take of politics; that they can hit with the vigor and directness of men. There was little smirking helplessness on the part of the women candidates, little of the "really my home comes first but my country needs me" hypocrisy that was so prevalent among the early women office-seekers. Most of the women candidates came out frankly and said they wanted the offices because they were better fitted for them than anyone else and that they could very well use the money.

* * * *

The women candidates also seemed to have outgrown what was once known as ladies' club campaigning. Subtleties and evasions, whisperings and polite innuendoes were not generally resorted to. Fights were made on the platform—even before heckling audiences—rather than over the tea table. There were charges, counter-charges, open letters and challenges, all the little touches that make political campaigns so delightfully exhilirating.

* * * *

The election at least proved that women are growing up in politics. From the standpoint of numbers they may have suffered political slaughter, but from their gains in political experience "'twas a famous victory."

Blondes Most Beautiful, Brunettes Most Fascinating, Austrian Artist Says

Women Classed as "Theater" Or "Salon" Types by Baron

By Hope Ridings Miller.

THE MOST beautiful women in the world are blondes. But brunettes are as a rule more fascinating. And, often, the "in-betweens" are more attractive than either.

So thinks Baron Kurt de Pantz, Austrian portrait painter, now visiting in Washington.

"I have no favorite type," he said recently at his apartment in the Wardman Park Hotel. "After I have finished a portrait of a blonde, I like to do one of a brunette. Then I like to paint a woman with Titian hair. But as for preferring one type to another—I don't."

A glimpse of some lovely portraits the baron has recently finished revealed that the Austrian artist does almost any type exceptionally well. Furthermore, having done so many portraits both in this country and in Europe, he has some very definite ideas about what makes a woman attractive.

Beautiful women are divided into two classes, in his opinion. "There's the 'theater type' of beauty," he explained, then added, "And I'm not referring to the woman on the stage—who, away from the footlights may, or may not be attractive—but to the woman whose appearance at the theater, in a hotel lobby, on the street, or in a crowd is so striking, one immediately notices her.

"Such a woman is usually very definitely a blonde or a brunette. She is generally tall and slender, carries herself well, and knows how to wear clothes to the best advantage.

"Then there's what I call the 'salon type' of beauty, who might easily pass unnoticed in a crowd. She is, obviously, more beautiful than attractive. You might pass without seeing her on the street, at the theater, or at a ball; but if you were seated next to her in a drawing room, you would see she is beautiful and wonder why you hadn't noticed her before. Her features are more regular than those of the 'theater type.' Her coloring is more delicate, and her teeth, hair and eyes, more nearly perfect."

He pointed out that a woman might not be "pretty," in the accepted sense of the word, and yet be "beautiful." "If her personality is so magnetic, you forget whether she is pretty and exactly how she looks, she is beautiful," he said. "Then, too, sometimes on first sight, you think a woman is pretty because her hair and eyes are lovely, her teeth even and white, and her figure without a flaw. But after you talk with her and discover her personality is negative, she ceases to be attractive.

Personality Paramount.

"After all, a pretty face and a perfect figure are much less important than a charming personality, even from an artist's point of view."

What, in the opinion of the baron, made a woman attractive at first sight?

"The way she walks into a room—her poise," he promptly replied. "The manner in which she carries herself is just as important as her figure. And a good figure is just as important as a pretty face.

"Then, the features. To the artist's eye, the nose, eyes, mouth, and shape of the face are far more noticeable than good coloring. For coloring can be artificially supplied, while it takes a surgical operation to make over a nose. You see, it's almost impossible for a portrait painter to see any attractive woman without trying to visualize how she would look on canvas."

Baron de Pantz has had extensive art training and wide experience as a portrait painter. Beginning at an early age, he studied at the Royal Academy in Vienna for six years. Later he studied in Rome and then went to Paris, where he opened a studio. There he met Miss Mildred Nelson whom he later married. A descendant of Gov. Thomas Nelson, and a native of the United States, she was studying art at the time he opened his studio in Paris.

Has Visited U. S. Three Times.

"Before I married, I had never been to the United States," he said. "But since then, I've been over three times. I like it over here. But, of course, I still enjoy going back to my own country, especially to Vienna."

A member of a very prominent family, he was born near Vienna. His father, who died last year, was with Starhemberg, one of the founders and members of the famous Heimwehr.

If personalities count for so much, it would seem the baron himself would be a good subject for a portrait. Of medium height, slender, with dark hair and blue eyes, he is attractive. Furthermore, he has that rare something called, for want of a better name, "continental charm."

He is a keen observer and is well informed on a number of subjects. In discussing American and European women, he pointed out the difference is not so much between them as between their husbands.

U. S. Wives Are Companions.

"European men usually make important decisions without consulting their wives," he said. "Women over there look after their children, attend to their homes, and rarely, if ever, take an active part in their husbands' business affairs.

"American men, on the other hand, regard their wives as companions, and consult them about every phase of their business. For this reason, American women often have many interests outside the home."

When asked which had the better part, he answered thoughtfully: "I don't know. I sometimes wonder."

Newbery Prize Dinner to Be Held Tonight

Joseph Auslander and Herman H. B. Meryer to Be Speakers.

AUTHORS will come to Washington from all parts of the United States to attend the "Newbery Prize" banquet to be given by the Torch Club of Wilson Teachers College at 7 o'clock tonight at the Mayflower Hotel.

Speakers will include Joseph Auslander, author of "The Winged Horse," who will talk on the Newbery Prize winners, and Herman H. B. Meryer, author and bibliographer, who will speak on "The Man Behind the Newbery Book."

Other Newbery medal winners who will attend are: Eric Kelly, who is to receive Poland's highest decoration for foreigners, "Polonia Restituta," for his book, "The Trumpeter of Cracow;" Arthur Bowie Chrisman, of Virginia; Laura Adams Armer, of California; Rachel Field, of New York; Elizabeth Foreman Lewis, of Maryland, and Carnelai Meigs, of Pennsylvania.

Armistice Day Program.

AN ELABORATE program in celebration of Armistice Day has been arranged by the Ladies Auxiliary of Washington Post, No. 58, Jewish War Veterans of the United States. It will be held at 8 o'clock Sunday night in the Cafritz auditorium of the Jewish Community Center, Sixteenth and Q streets northwest.

Admiral Woodward, of the United States Navy, will be the principal speaker. Music will be furnished by a special orchestra of the Navy Band and a nationally-known soloist will render patriotic selections.

William I. Berman, National commander-in-chief of the Jewish War Veterans, will present post colors to the Ladies Auxiliary.

Defense Committee Meeting.

MRS. LUCIA RAMSAY MAXWELL, author of anti-Communistic books, and Mrs. George Madden Grimes, State regent, will be the principal speakers at the meeting of the National defense committee, District of Columbia Daughters of the American Revolution, at 10:30 o'clock today at the Mayflower Hotel.

Mrs. Rice W. Means, chairman of the committee, will be assisted by Mrs. Margaret S. Zimmele, chairman of un-American activities; Mrs. Ashman N. Brown, chairman of Army, Navy and Marine Corps division; Mrs. William M. McKellar, in charge of immigration and deportation committee; Mrs. Noble N. Potts, chairman of civilian training; Mrs. Bates Warren, chairman of patriotic education, and Mrs. Robert Clay Sherrill, secretary of the committee.

Representatives of all chapters in the District are invited to attend.

Capt. Joseph Magruder Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, will entertain State officers, chapter regents and State chairmen at a tea from 4 to 6 o'clock today at the home of Mrs. Joseph H. Wheat, 410 B street northeast.

Armistice Ball To Pay Tribute With 'Taps' Call

V. F. W. to Honor 'Buddies' at Brilliant Event Here Tomorrow.

Taps sounded by Sergt. Frank Witchey, Third Cavalry, U. S. A., who had the distinction of serving as bugler at the unveiling of the tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington, will be the tribute to the departed "buddies" of the Veterans of Foreign Wars at the brilliant ball of the veterans tomorrow night at the Willard Hotel. During this ceremony the guests will bow their heads.

The ball, which will celebrate the signing of the Armistice, is given annually to raise funds to aid disabled and destitute veterans. The President and Mrs. Roosevelt head the list of sponsors, which includes officials, members of the diplomatic corps and residential society.

In the distinguished list of boxholders are the Ambassador of Great Britain, Sir Ronald Lindsay; the Ambassador of Poland, Mr. Stanislaw Patek; the Ambassador of France and Mme. de Laboulaye, the Secretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., the Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, the Secretary of Commerce and Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, the Minister of Portugal and Mme. de Bianchi, the Undersecretary of State and Mrs. William Phillips, Mr. Lyman Briggs, Mr. J. O. Robert, department commander of the American Legion; Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Bonsall, Mr. Frank Hecht, deputy administrator, Division No. 4; the Minister of Hungary and Mme. Pelenyi, the Treasure of the United States and Mrs. William A. Julian, the Charge d'Affaires of Nicaragua and Senora de Bayle and Mrs. Jacob Leander Loose.

Harrisons to Honor Kindler at Supper

The former United States Minister to Uruguay and now president of the board of directors of the National Symphony Orchestra Association and Mrs. Leland Harrison will be among the guests at the buffet supper to be given in honor of Dr. Hans Kindler, conductor of the symphony, and Mrs. Kindler by the Newspaper Women's Club, Sunday night at 6:30 o'clock in the auditorium of the National Press Club. The supper will follow immediately the concert of the orchestra in Constitution Hall.

Mrs. Roosevelt Hostess Today

Mrs. Roosevelt will be hostess at luncheon today in the White House in honor of Mrs. Josephine Brown and the regional welfare directors. Tomorrow she will give two radio addresses, one for a teachers' group in New York and the other for the opening of the Red Cross drive.

Monday morning the First Lady will go to New York, where she will open the exhibit and sale of Val Kill furniture at her residence there and later in the day will open the exhibition of children's work which is to be a benefit sale for the Little Red School House. Monday night she will leave for St. Louis to attend the conference for the mobilization of human needs which is to be held on Wednesday. Immediately following the conference she will return to New York to attend the dinner to be given in honor of Mrs. Mary K. Simkhovitch at the Roosevelt Hotel.

Friday Mrs. Roosevelt will meet the President at Harrodsburg, Ky., and will accompany him to Warm Springs, Ga., where they plan to remain for Thanksgiving, returning to the White House the first week in December.

'Chicken Legs' Solve Family Problem, Providing 'Drumstick' for Each Member

Delicious Dish Prepared From Cubes of Pork and Veal.

By Dorothea Duncan.

EVERY woman with a husband and several small children has a problem on her hands when she decides to serve chicken for dinner. Father usually prefers the white meat, and the children demand the "drumsticks." It sounds like an ideal arrangement, and so it is, unless there are more than two children in the family. Then there is a wild scramble to see which two emerge victorious with a chicken leg.

Chickens can't be induced to grow four legs, but this needn't stop you from pleasing your entire family. Have your butcher fix some "chicken legs" for you, and if he isn't familiar with this dish, this is the way to do it. Cut 2-inch cubes of pork and veal, twice as many of veal as pork, and arrange three cubes on a wooden meat skewer. The pork cube should be placed between two of veal and enough of the skewer left protruding to give the appearance of a chicken leg. Now you have "drumsticks" for the whole family and each one is composed entirely of white meat.

Cook the "chicken legs" as you would fry chicken. The flavor of the two meats will blend and the result is a dish as delicate as chicken itself.

Following is the way South Carolinians fry chicken and "chicken legs" can be prepared in the same manner.

Dip each "chicken leg" quickly in cold water, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and roll in flour. Cook quickly over a hot flame in a heavy frying pan, in which fat has been melted, until the meat is golden brown on all sides. Turn the heat low, add enough hot water to keep the meat from sticking, and cover. Cook until the meat is tender when pierced with a fork. Turn up the heat until the meat again becomes crisp, remove to a warming oven and make gravy with the meat essence in the frying pan.

The favorite chicken accompaniments can be served with "chicken legs" to make your Sunday dinner a truly festive one. Following are suggested menus for the entire week-end.

Week-End Menus.

Saturday Breakfast.

Applesauce
Dry cereal with top milk
Shirred eggs
Buttered toast
Coffee Hot cocoa (for children)

Saturday Luncheon.

Baked macaroni and cheese
Hawaiian salad
Sugar cookies
Tea Milk (for children)

Saturday Dinner.

"Chicken legs"
Candied sweet potatoes
Green peas
Cranberry relish Celery hearts
Chocolate refrigerator cake
Beverage

Sunday Supper.

Grapefruit and shrimp salad
Whole wheat wafers
Tokay grapes Spice cake
Chocolate milk

Grated Cabbage, Pineapple, Marshmallows Fine for Salad.

The Hawaiian salad suggested for Saturday luncheon is merely grated cabbage dressed up by the addition of chopped pineapple and cut marshmallows, and seasoned with a few grains of salt and a little mayonnaise.

The half-and-half cocktail for Sunday dinner is half tomato juice and half clam juice mixed together and seasoned to taste.

Following is the recipe for chocolate refrigerator cake:

Chocolate Refrigerator Cake.

Chocolate cookies (1 can, round cookies are preferable)
Unsweetened whipped cream (½ pint)

Spread chocolate cookies with whipped cream. Place second cookie on top of first and spread with whipped cream. Continue spreading and piling cookies, one on top of the other until cake of desired size is obtained. Place on a platter and cover roll with whipped cream. Place in refrigerator and chill until firm. Serve on same platter. To serve cut slices diagonally.

Fluted edges dress up BANANA FRUIT SALAD

BANANA FRUIT SALAD

Arrange a mound of fruit composed of two or more fresh fruits in season, or canned fruits, in center of bed of lettuce. Peel two ripe bananas, make parallel grooves lengthwise with prongs of silver fork, and cut into fairly thick slices. Arrange overlapping banana slices in circle around mound of fruit. Top with mayonnaise or whipped cream.

• • •

BANANA SLICES with fluted edges add a maître d'hôtel touch to your fruit salad. Just take a silver fork, run it down the length of a peeled banana before slicing—and let your guests wonder how you did it! Guaranteed to start conversation. Try it and see.

Handkerchiefs Have Borders Of Cellophane

By Katherine Smith.

CELLOPHANE continues to fulfill new needs. First utilized for cigarette covers and wrappers for all sorts of merchandise, it was next fashioned into lamp shades, curtains, evening capes. Here's its latest appearance.

Chiffon evening handkerchiefs are bordered on two sides with a glistening cellophane fringe. You can hang them from your ring or bracelet as a hankie, or by folding them cornerwise through the middle, you can make for yourself the loveliest scarf that ever graced an evening frock. The double material makes the folds soft and becoming, the fringe falls like water around your shoulders.

Three-Cornered Scarf.

These scarf-handkerchiefs come in red, royal blue, royal purple, green and white with black fringe. All others have matching fringes.

Speaking of three-cornered scarfs, there's a new one in Roman striped chiffon velvet. It's soft and rich-looking; it will blend with a colored frock, or heighten the dullness of a black one. Very "swish" for afternoon or informal evening occasions.

Yule Gifts for Men.

Better think about Christmas shopping now, because in the rush, you'll forget to be careful about selections. Here is an item that will solve the problem—what shall I give a man?

A brown leather jacket that zippers up the front is a fine buy for the sportsman. It is warmly lined with maroon-colored wool on the inside, and on the outside, front and back, it is covered with the softest beaver. Even the collar is covered with the fur, making it impossible for winter breezes to whistle down the masculine neck. The sleeves are plain leather; there is a half belt across the front, and two roomy pockets.

For the sportsman, what would be a better gift than white string gloves? These are cotton, unlined, well fitted and washable. Another style is canary yellow, lined with finely knitted wool. Both of these styles will blend with a man's sports wardrobe, and add a smart touch besides.

Newspaper Holder.

When the harassed husband gets himself all tangled up in the morning paper and the ham and eggs, something must be done. One manufacturer has come to the rescue of the frantic wife by designing a little newspaper holder that may be placed beside the coffee cup. It will keep the folded paper upright and allow the husband to use both his hands in the business of breakfast. These holders are in cream and a very attractive chromium model.

Streamlined Velocipede.

If father has a streamlined automobile, the small son should own a streamlined velocipede. The boy will be the proudest one in the neighborhood astride this smart bright red affair.

The entire structure of the tricycle is designed to break the wind. The wheels are inclosed in "pants," just like the fenders of father's car. The shaft up the middle is covered with the streamlined "body." Even the rubber pedals are narrower in the back than in the front.

There's a comfortable leather seat, and a good-sized "running board" on the back to hold a second passenger.

These velocipedes come in three sizes, according to the size of the child. Highly recommended by Santa Claus.

Mirrors for Bedrooms.

More mirrors for bedrooms. This time three of them join forces to form a screen. They are tall, slender and very simple. Now you can have a full-length view and fill an awkward corner of your room at the same time. A hint: mirrors always make a room look larger than it is.

If one looking glass isn't enough, here's a dresser that is nothing but mirrors. That is, all but the legs, and they're chromium. The top, sides, front are all gleaming and silvery. Ideal for a modernistic bedroom.

Drapes Made to Order.

The wise housewife will have her winter draperies made to order. One decorator will measure, make and hang your drapes for less than $10 a pair. When finished, they are expertly finished, lined when necessary, backed at the top with buckram, and fitted for the exact space.

Let this decorator select sample materials for you. He will be glad to advise you on any phase of house furnishings, tell you what is needed here or there, what new pieces to select. Also, he does very good upholstering and refinishing.

Too, you may see some things in his antique shop that you will want to buy, either for your home or your friends.

Daytime Skirt Is Basis Of Versatile Wardrobe

Pattern No. 827.

THE SEPARATE skirt can be made to serve more purposes than any other single garment. The woman who has several perfectly fitting daytime skirts like the one pictured here has the basis of a versatile wardrobe. It gives one a chance to indulge passing or permanent fancies in sweaters, blouses of every possible daytime description, jerkins and jackets.

The longer-length skirt is for the woman who dines out, attends many late afternoon functions, and must have variety in clothes on a limited income. In velvet or satin, it will combine charmingly with silk and metal cloth blouses. This smart, slit skirt is always attractive. And a change of the blouse worn with it effects a complete change of costume.

Both of these skirts come in the same pattern, in sizes 27 to 34. Complete yardage requirements are given on the pattern envelope.

Jennifer Hale

By Rob Eden

A SLIGHT click startled Kent. It was so close. The sound was in the room. Andy looked up, too. "Something must have dropped in one of the drawers——"

Another click, and Andy was on his feet, Kent with him, but it was too late. The room was flooded with light, and at the light switch was Ives, covering them both with a gun.

"I stood it as long as I could," he said slowly, "but the closet was pretty stuffy. Didn't know I was in there, did you? Didn't think to search the office before you started rifling my files? Hands up!"

"I didn't stay at the Belasco Theater this evening, Mr. Young, although I saw David Richardson to his seat. I'll have that gun you have in your hip pocket, Mr. Young. No, don't take your hands down. I'll get it." Ives moved forward and took the gun from Andy's pocket.

"Have you a gun, Mr. Severn?" Kent said he hadn't.

Without taking his eyes off his two prisoners, Ives moved two straight-backed chairs to the middle of the room. "You can sit down," he said politely.

Without taking his eyes off the two men, Ives slid into his swivel chair behind the desk and pulled two books in front of him, a rest for his right arm, which held his gun. His left hand picked up Andy's gun, which he had put on the desk. This, too, was trained on Kent and Andy.

"Now that we're comfortable——" he laughed and his fair eyebrows raised a little.

There was perhaps a two or three minute silence before Ives spoke again.

"I'll hear your case against me, Young. I'm curious to know how you've built it up." Ives laughed again, and the laugh sent a chill through Kent, for it was not a sane man's laugh. Andy started to speak.

"You killed David Corey, who was the best friend you ever had."

Loan Was Refused.

"It starts back in June, when Corey lent you $3,000, a friendly loan because you needed it. You'd been plunging on the market heavily to try to make up losses in your business. You probably told Corey the money was for your business."

Andy paused, and Ives spoke. "I did tell him that."

"You told him it would be a short-term loan, and you intended it to be, but you figured without the market. In July it started to drop. You covered your losses as best you could. In August you needed another $5,000 for a business deal. You asked Corey for it."

"He refused you, so on August 6 you procured a fountain pen with the same point his had, also some ink which he was accustomed to use, and forged a check for $5,000. You banked in the same bank he did. It was no trick getting a book of Security-First National Bank checks. You only had to use one of your own books. You knew enough about Corey's personal business to know that he never numbered his personal checks. I don't know, Ives, whether this was the first check you ever forged or not. I think it was."

"It was," Kent heard Ives say. In the little silence that followed he wondered if he were really in Ives' office, and Ives was sitting at the desk holding two guns. Or whether he was dreaming——

Andy continued in the same even voice. "By this time business was a little better. You hoped you'd be able to put the money, the $5,000, back into Corey's account in a few days, or have it for him if he found out about your forgery. I think you were honest about that, Ives. I think you wanted to return the money."

"I did."

"But the deal you expected to have through in a few days—the deal for which you had forged the check for $5,000—was delayed. You were almost crazy. Corey didn't know about the check yet, for the bank had honored it without calling him.

"The first of September, when the regular statements for the bank were sent out, you were desperate. Your deal, you thought, had fallen through entirely. Corey would find out about the check. He had a peculiar sense of justice, I hear. His sister told me about it. He couldn't stand being bilked by his friends, especially when he had helped them.

"You knew Corey was going out with Jennifer Hale the evening of September 1. You knew, also, they were going to dinner, and he wouldn't open his personal mail before he left the apartment to meet her. He never arrived home until after six, and he had to change his clothes. I don't know how you got your key to his apartment, Ives——"

Ives interrupted. "I'd had it for a long time. A year. Had it made when Corey left his keys at my place once."

Andy continued. "That puzzled me. How you got in. Well, September 1 you damaged the ignition system in your car yourself. That must have been about 7. You had mechanics come for your car, and you went over to the garage for a few minutes, later, to see what was the matter. You stayed at the garage perhaps 5 minutes, and then walked on to Moore House. Sherman had fallen to sleep after dinner, as he usually did. He gets very sleepy after a heavy meal. You had to wait at the service entrance of Moore House for some time to get up the stairs, because you didn't want any one to see you. You probably hid in the bushes until everything was clear. The Negro porter annoyed you with his puttering around. It was probably 8 o'clock when you got upstairs, meeting nobody on the stairs. You went immediately to the desk where Corey's mail was lying unopened."

Junior League Celebrates Its 20th Birthday

Past Presidents Attend Informal Luncheon at Mayflower.

The Junior League of Washington, smart and animated, turned out yesterday for the luncheon given in celebration of its twentieth birthday. The grand ballroom of the Mayflower, decorated with palms and masses of bronze, yellow and gold chrysanthemums, buzzed with greetings and conversation, as about 200 members of the league met.

A fitting solution of seating the guests was arranged by Miss Cecil Lester Jones and Mrs. John Selby, who were in charge of the committee of arrangements—each committee of the league at an individual table.

Miss Greene Presides.

At the speakers' table Miss Anne Carter Greene, president of the league, presided, and had with her the guests of honor, Mrs. William Chapin Huntington, who officially organized the Washington league in 1914, and Miss Clare Tousley, assistant director of the Charity Organization Society of New York, who came to Washington especially to speak at the luncheon.

Others at the table were Miss Emily Thomason, of Richmond, Va., regional director of the league; founders of the Washington league, including Miss Mary Howry and Miss Elizabeth Howry, Mrs. Lawrence Baker, Miss Frances Webster, Mrs. George B. Bloomer, Miss Mary Veeder, Miss Lena Hitchcock and Mrs. David Pearce Penhallow.

Past Presidents Attend.

Miss Greene, who wore a gown of black crepe with a cowl collar of the palest blue satin, and a large black velvet beret, greeted the guests and made an introductory speech, naming each of the former presidents of the league, most of whom were present. Miss Katherine Dunlop, the predecessor of Miss Greene was absent, having left Washington several months ago to visit Mrs. Lewis Clark, the former Miss Anne Covington, in China.

Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, president from 1930 to 1931, was present, wearing a gown of light brown trimmed with wine-colored velvet, and a dark-brown hat. Mrs. Howland Chase 3d, Mrs. Sidney Thomas, smart in dark-green with a beige topcoat also were present.

Mrs. Walter E. Edge, wife of the former United States Ambassador to France, was absent, but Miss Virginia Hunt and Mrs. Chauncey Parker were present. Mrs. Glerasch, the former Miss Mary Hellen, of Washington, came from Boston to attend, and Mrs. Wilder Baker, the former Miss Cora Berry, who has recently returned to the Capital, also was there, as were Miss Louise King, Miss Sophie Sweet, Mrs. Chandler Oliphant and Mrs. Smith Hempstone, first president of the Washington league.

Recalls the Early Days.

Mrs. Huntington, as one of the founders and official incorporator of the league, addressed the gathering, and delightfully recalled the early days. In 1912, Miss Brown, head of the associated charities, suggested to Mrs. Hempstone, who was then Miss Elizabeth Noyes, a debutante of the year, that a Junior League branch in Washington would be of the greatest assistance to the charities here. So Miss Noyes gathered eight of her sister debutantes together and they established a sewing class, which met regularly.

Their first benefit performance was given in 1913, when, although not officially affiliated with the Junior League, they produced "The Little Princess" and were assisted by the "mandolin club," which, as Mrs. Huntington pointed out, was a favorite form of entertainment among the "flaming youth" of those days.

Provided for Needy.

In 1914, the Washington Junior League was taking care of nine families and at Christmas time filled stockings for 48 children.

The first really large ball given by the league was the "Oriental Ball," held at Rauscher's five years after organization, and the league made the front pages of the papers and netted $2,000. It was called "the largest and most important event in the history of Washington and rivaled the Beaux Arts ball in magnificence," Mrs. Huntington recalled.

The affair yesterday was delightfully informal, and when Miss Tousley was introduced and began to tell of her work in New York she announced that if there were any ladies of the press present her speech was to be "off the record."

Flavor Added To Plain Food By Seasoning

Low Cost Balanced Diet Is Recommended by Federal Bureau.

ALL THE knowledge in the world about the proper foods we need for good health won't induce us to eat them if we can't enjoy them. Foods properly seasoned are tempting, and even the plainest food may be made palatable in this way.

The Bureau of Home Economics, U. S. Department of Agriculture, not only recommends the following low-cost balanced diet, but it gives inexpensive seasonings for the low cost meal. Following is the bureau's family food guide to low-cost balanced diet:

Every meal—Milk for children, bread for all.

Every day—Cereal in porridge or pudding, potatoes, tomatoes or oranges for children, a green or yellow vegetable, a fruit or additional vegetable, milk for all.

Two to four times a week—Tomatoes for all, dried beans and peas or peanuts, eggs (especially for children), lean meat, fish, or poultry or cheese.

After the necessary food values are provided, the housewife has to consider how to satisfy the family. She has to make the most of the natural flavor in each food, and, if necessary, skillfully emphasize it with added seasonings.

Human Body Needs Salt.

Salt, pepper, salt pork, meat drippings, onions, garlic, vinegar and sugar are the cheapest seasonings for meats and vegetables. The problem is to make the most of them, as well as of the natural flavors in the food.

A certain amount of salt is necessary to the human body, but there are so many ways that salt may enter our diet that we need to be cautioned against using too much rather than not enough. The good cook uses salt discreetly, merely to bring out the flavor, as in applesauce or cake. Salt complements the bland flavor of the food itself.

Salt pork may be cooked with greens, string beans or cabbage, or cut in bits, browned and, with the drippings, sprinkled over greens. Use crisp pieces in soups or chowders or beat them into sweet potatoes and brown in a baking dish in the oven. The result is a tempting new flavor.

Keep bacon drippings in a jar in the refrigerator or in the next coolest place, otherwise they will turn rancid. They have a salty, smoked flavor that makes them a choice seasoning for greens or beans or cabbage, and a good fat for frying cooked potatoes, mush, liver, some kinds of fish, rice cakes and even sliced apples. Keep drippings separately—that is, beef in one jar, pork in another, as each kind of dripping has its separate use.

Sugar, like salt, can be used merely to develop flavor. A bit of sugar will bring back the sweetness of fresh peas or beans after their own sugar has changed to starch, which often happens if vegetables have stood for awhile after picking.

Onions Help Many Dishes.

The Germans and other central Europeans use vinegar and sugar for their famous "sours" or "sweet sours"—sauerbraten (sour beef) for example. A good recipe for sweet-sour red cabbage calls for a little fat, butter best of all, brown sugar, vinegar and chopped tart red apple, to give the tempting flavor desired.

A "suspicion" of onion as some cooks say, goes a long way to add the right flavor to many a dish.

Black and white pepper, cayenne and Mexican chili peppers are some of the seasonings used to pep up a mild dish. These should be tightly covered to keep the flavor.

Curry costs more than the commoner seasonings, but it is a mixture of spices long used in India and the East, and is so different from other seasonings thta it makes a good variation for meats, fish or vegetables.

Mrs. Gordon Jones Is Hostess at Tea

Mrs. Quin, widow of Representative Percy Quin, of Mississippi, has returned to her Washington home, where she will stay for the winter. Mrs. Quin was the guest in whose honor Mrs. A. Gordon Jones entertained at tea yesterday afternoon in her apartment at the St. Nicholas.

Mrs. Jones was assisted by Mrs. Fulton Lewis and Mrs. Thomas Hardy Taliaferro, who presided at the tea table, and Miss Anne Madison Hardy Taliaferro, who presided at the tea table, and Miss Anne Madison Washington, who was the official hostess at little Mount Vernon, the exhibit of the United States at the Paris Exposition, a few years ago, served punch. Others assisting during the afternoon were Mrs. John S. Barbour, Mrs. Oliver Lerch and Mrs. Lewis Jeffries.

Mrs. Quin has been away for several years since the death of Representative Quin, and during that time she made her home in their residence in Mississippi.

Nice Margin In Annapolis Area 1,100

4 Key Offices of Anne Arundel Go to G. O. P.

Revolt Against Ritchie Is Stronger Than Expected.

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—Final figures of the vote polled in Anne Arundel County in Tuesday's election show that Harry W. Nice, Republican Governor-elect, defeated Governor Ritchie by a majority of nearly 1,100, and that the G. O. P. victory was increased to the extent of electing one of the block of six delegates to the General Assembly in addition to winning the four key berths, indicated by early returns.

The successful G. O. P. candidate for the Assembly is Allen C. K. Clark, who polled 7,039 to defeat Albert W. Woodfield, lowest man of the Democratic group, whose vote was 6,782.

Anne Arundel normally is a Democratic county, but the revolt against Governor Ritchie was stronger than expected. The party, however, retained administrative control of affairs by electing its seven candidates for county commissioners, although one, John J. Levay, former mayor of Annapolis, barely pulled through by a margin of 13 over T. Rowland Brown. Reports were current tonight that Mr. Brown contemplated asking a recount.

Posts Gained by G. O. P.

The important posts gained by Republicans were those of clerk of the circuit court, county treasurer, sheriff and State's attorney. Activities of the Better Government League, a nonpartisan organization which waged an energetic campaign in behalf of reduced taxation and improved conditions in governmental affairs generally, proved a big factor in the success of Republican candidates.

Two of the county's eight districts approved the referred laws relating to liquor sale. These were the Third and Fifth Districts near Baltimore City. In the Third District the vote was at a ratio of 3 to 2 for sale by drink, and 2 to 1 on bottle goods. The result in the Fifth District was much closer.

Voters also disapproved the proposal to change the method of nominating county commissioners, from unit vote by districts, to county-wide totals.

The Unofficial Vote.

The complete, but unofficial, vote for officers follows:

Clerk of circuit court—Frank A. Munroe, Republican, 8,373; George T. Cromwell, Democrat, 7,810. Munroe's majority, 563.

County treasurer—Joseph H. Pepper, Republican, 7,942; C. Albert Hodges, Democrat, 7,505. Pepper's majority, 437.

Sheriff—Joseph W. Alton, Republican, 7,537; Steven J. Evard, Democrat, 6,812. Alton's majority, 725.

Register of wills—W. Meade Holladay, Democrat, 9,479; Louis J. Dealba, Republican, 5,536. Holladay's majority, 3,943.

County commissioners—Thomas J. Cullimore, Democrat, 9,067; Weems, Republican; Duvall, Democrat, 8,267; John J. Levay, Democrat, 7,526; W. W. Townshend, Democrat, 8,535; J. Thomas Hutchins, Democrat, 7,861; William A. Pumphrey, Democrat, 7,615; W. Benton Shipley, Democrat, 7,943; T. Roland Brown, Republican, 7,513; Edgar J. Kemp, Republican, 6,467; Alexander W. Andrews, Republican, 6,096; Linton A. Pumphrey, 6,492; William G. Lehr, Republican, 6,717; W. Coleman Rogers, 6,593; Romeo Redmiles, League, 3,058.

State's attorney—Roscoe C. Rowe, Republican, 8,489; A. Theodore Brady, Democrat, 7,283. Rowe's majority, 1,206.

State senator—Ridgeley P. Melvin, Democrat, 8,691; Joseph S. Bigelow, Republican, 6,964. Melvin's majority, 1,667.

House of Delegates—R. Chester Cromwell, Democrat, 8,197; Wilbur R. Dulin, Democrat, 7,825; William H. Labrot, Democrat, 7,923; Philip Miller, Democrat, 8,192; George E. Mason, Democrat, 7,464; Albert W. Woodfield, Democrat, 6,782; Allen C. K. Clark, Republican, 7,039; Milton C. Greer, Republican, 6,996; T. Roscoe Hall, Republican, 6,540; Leroy T. Mankin, Republican, 6,553; W. W. Sullivan, Republican, 3,946; Louis Strauss, Republican, 5,996; W. Emery (League), 1,901.

Judges of orphans court—Maynard Carr, Democrat, 8,118; William B. Elliot, Democrat, 7,907; B. Elliott Owens, Democrat, 7,937; Joseph S. Griscom, Republican, 5,392; Thomas E. Stevens, Republican, 6,012; Frankie Wilson, Republican, 5,837.

Surveyor—Edward Hall, Democrat, unopposed, 6,981.

Compass, Imbedded in Tree, Marks Tragedy of Civil War

Mrs. V. G. Fleming points out the old compass, buried in the ivy-covered chestnut tree outside her home, where a Union officer's horse was tethered just before a Confederate shell killed his owner in the Battle of Fredericksburg.

Union Officer Met Death as Aid Paused Near Fleming Home.

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—When a Union officer's aid at the Battle of Fredericksburg drove an engineer's compass into the trunk of a chestnut tree, tethered a horse to it, and forthwith saw his officer mortally wounded by a Confederate shell, he unwittingly marked for future generations the present home of Mrs. V. G. Fleming, widow of a Confederate veteran and civic leader here.

Mrs. Fleming, a white-haired little lady well in her seventies, has achieved Nation-wide prominence as the savior of Kenmore, Colonial home of Betty Washington Lewis, sister of the first President, and as a leader in preserving many historic shrines here. Even she, however, was unaware, until 25 years ago, of the significance of the chestnut tree at her front door.

At that time, Mrs. Fleming said, a man paused at her doorstep, examined the tree, and conducted an excited discussion with his companions, a woman and two children. Questioned, he told the story of the compass, and disclosed the almost completely covered remains of the instrument in the tree.

"On the day of the Battle of Fredericksburg," he said, "my captain and I paused for rest near this spot. I drove his engineer's compass into the tree and helped him tether his horse to the instrument. As he dismounted, he was felled by a piece of Confederate artillery and died at my feet. He gave his papers and a last message to deliver to his wife. This lady, my captain's daughter, is my wife, and these children are my captain's grandchildren."

Mrs. Fleming knows only that her visitor was named Clarke, and the identity of the captain who met his death at the point where she now resides is unknown. The compass is now almost entirely covered by bark and vines.

Police Chief Faces Murder Warrant

Shot Man in Self-Defense, Officer Declares.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—A murder warrant was issued today against Police Chief Frank Corbin, 50, of Nutter Fort, in the slaying of William W. Wilson, 36, Quiet Dell FERA worker, last evening at the home of Mrs. Enoch Longenetta, of Nutter Fort, who said Wilson was threatening to kill her.

Corbin said he shot in self-defense. "Chief Corbin had made threats to kill my brother and there is more behind this than most people know," said Carl Wilson, brother of the victim and Elk district constable, who swore out the warrant.

Nice Retains County Margin In Final Tally

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—A complete count of Washington County's vote in Tuesday's election, which showed Harry W. Nice carrying it by 3,287, did not greatly alter yesterday's forecast with 19 missing precincts.

The hand of the anti-Ritchie faction headed by Dr. J. Hubert Wade, who directed the primary campaign of Dr. Charles Conley, was seen throughout most of the county vote.

In Dr. Wade's own district at Boonsboro, which ordinarily had a Democratic majority of 260. Nice won by 342 and Zihlman, by 261.

Lewis Loses Support.

Lewis was "cut" by the anti-Ritchie faction, it was stated, because he declined to support Conley for the nomination. The Nice majority in the county was within 300 of Conley's vote here in the primary.

Besides electing their State Senator, Ernest W. Miller, Republicans also named three of their legislative ticket—Henry Holzapfel 3d, Allen Myers and Hugh Troxell—while the Democrats elected Frederick Beachley, Charles G. S. Hartle and Harvey M. Miller.

But one Democrat, Harry T. Brewer, was elected to the board of county commissioners. Republicans elected John Ankeney, Simon L. Downey, Frank R. Beard, sr., and judges of the orphans court—Keller.

Three Democrats were elected judges of the orphans' court—Keller Beard, Charles C. Ford and Lloyd K. Hoffman.

Max C. Mallott, Democrat, who had the support of the anti-Ritchie faction, was elected sheriff over Scott McKline by 1,151 majority.

Three Republicans Win.

Harry Newcome, Republican, defeated Harry A. Shafer for register of wills; Harry E. Keedy, Republican, defeated John G. Bower for county treasurer; Martin Ingram, Republican, defeated Martin V. Bostetter for State's attorney, and Edward M. Schindel, Democrat, defeated John B. Ferguson for county surveyor.

Representative Lewis, after receiving final returns which returned him to his seat in Congress, and thanking his friends in the Sixth District, prepared to go to Brisbin, Pa., the community where he spent his boyhood days, to rest for several days.

Game Protection Subject of Parley

21 Organizations to Send Delegates to Baltimore.

Baltimore, Nov. 8 (AP).—Fish and game conservation in Maryland will be discussed at the first annual State-wide outdoor life convention here November 21 and 22.

The convention, sponsored by 21 organizations, including the State conservation department, the State department of forestry, the Izaak Walton League, the University of Maryland and the Maryland Academy of Sciences, is being held "to coordinate and stimulate efforts of conservation, civic, scientific and outdoor organizations in the interests of the State of Maryland's outdoor life privileges."

An address will be delivered by Gov. Albert C. Ritchie. Mayor Howard W. Jackson of Baltimore, Swepson Earle, State conservation commissioner; Seth Gordon, president of the American Game Association, and Dr. M. D'Arcy Magee, vice president of the Izaak Walton League of America, are among the conservation advocates who will speak on the program of the two-day session.

Strike Move Dropped by Va. Students

Apology Offered Head of Fredericksburg Institution.

More Stringent Social Rules Are Protested, However.

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—The student body of Fredericksburg State Teachers College tonight dropped attempts at a strike against restrictive social regulations. It unanimously adopted a set of resolutions rescinding previous agitation and apologizing to Dr. Morgan L. Combs, president, and to the faculty.

Seven women students appointed by the student body appeared before tht faculty-student joint council this afternoon to protest the new rules, which limit the number of visits to town by students to three a week and restrict areas that may be visited. The committee consisted of Miss Thelma Evans, president of the student body, and the Misses Mary Elizabeth Minor, Frances Louise Taylor, Dina Galloway, Helen Harris, Dorothy Knox and Helen Taylor. No action was taken on their plea.

The committee then drafted the resolutions calling off the strike agitation and presented it to a meeting of the student body tonight, where they were approved.

Previously it was announced that disciplinary action against six more students who allegedly fomented the "strike," in addition to the expulsion yesterday of Miss Elvira Taylor, senior student, had been taken. Punishment was said to have taken the form of probation, under which students are forbidden any privileges, may not hold student offices and are subject to dismissal for violation of any school rule. Miss Evans said tonight, however, that she was not aware of any disciplinary action except the expulsion of Miss Taylor.

The council was still in session, interviewing students. Its investigation was directed toward questioning more than 25 who assertedly sent cards of condolence to Mrs. Combs, wife of the president, when Dr. Combs declined to appear at the first student mass meeting on the ground that his wife was ill. Faculty officers said the sending of the cards was "highly disrespectful."

Fred Taylor, of Emporia, Va., father of Miss Taylor, said at his home that he intends to visit the campus Monday to protest her dismissal. He termed her expulsion an "outrage." Dr. Combs informed him by telephone that he was welcome to visit the college but that it would "do him no good' so far as reinstatement of his daughter was concerned.

Front Royal Killer Given 40 Years

Front Royal, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—A Warren County jury, after one hour's deliberation today in the third trial of Joe Washington, colored, charged with the murder of Harry M. Boyer, Front Royal garage owner, on August 26, brought in a verdict of first degree murder and fixed Washington's punishment at 40 years in the penitentiary.

In the first trial, the jury agreed on a first degree verdict but was deadlocked between the death penalty and life imprisonment. In the second trial, the officers in charge of the jury permitted them to visit the scene of the crime, without the authority of the court, and discuss the case with a witness, and Judge Philip Williams ordered a mistrial.

Even the Ducks Helping Hunters

Baltimore, Nov. 8 (AP).—Bad weather over the week-end brought thousands of ducks to Maryland waters in time for the opening today of the duck-hunting season, E. Lee Lecompte, State game warden, said today.

"The birds weren't there last Saturday, but they came in from the North with the bad weather," he said. Lecompte reported the sale of hunting licenses was heavy.

The season closes January 12 and hunting is permitted on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week. The bag limit is 12 and a hunter may have only five teal, redheads, blackheads, canvasbacks, gadwall, shoveler and elder ducks as part of his bag limit at any one time.

Shenandoah Relief Classes Curtailed

Woodstock, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—Shenandoah County Superintendent of Public Instruction C. V. Shoemaker and John P. Will, in charge of organizing commercial classes under the FERA, yesterday notified nearly 100 prospective students that classes could not be established as planned.

Citing a letter received from State Superintendent of Public Instruction Sidney B. Hall and J. L. Blair Buck, director of the emergency educational program, Shoemaker and Will informed those students who had enrolled that "only unemployed adults who are actually on relief rolls can be included in classes in typing, shorthand, bookkeeping and accounting." Plans had been made for inclusion in these classes all interested persons over 16, regardless of whether they actually were on relief rolls.

Along the Tri-State Trail

with

C. B. Carr
Post State Editor.

Whether Virginia is situated at the top of the South or at the bottom of the North was one of the important questions as the Virginia State Planning Board met yesterday in Richmond to decide the future industrial course Virginia will follow. Col. Leroy Hodges, eminent economist and vice chairman of the State Planning Board, said that although northern Virginians trade and associate with the North, their political sentiments lean toward the South.

Frederick, Md., motorists will have to stop erasing the chalk marks police place on their tires. For quite a time there was no "come-back" from the officers as offenders claimed they had a right to do whatever they wanted with their private property. At a meeting of the Mayor and Aldermen recently, the traffic laws were amended to provide a penalty for the offense.

Age seems to have no limit for political "battlers" who like to get right down to business with their fists in Carroll County.

Election day, a 50-year-old Democratic campaigner of Sykesville tried to induce a Republican veteran of 80 summers to visit the polls. It seems that the elder "didn't have time." As the argument grew heated the gray-haired Republican grew more irked with his antagonist and gave him two black eyes.

Leana Beamer, colored, of Snow Hill, Md., is making a bid for mention in "Strange as it Seems." She is showing a Plymouth Rock rooster 9-months-old, which, instead of having two legs, is a quadruped. The extra two appendages are perfectly formed and extend at right angles to the body.

Harrisonburg Classes Finish Organization

Miss Stone Made President of Teachers College Freshmen.

Other Class Officers.

Senior Day Begins.

Senior day at the college began this morning when Dr. Samuel P. Duke, president, and Dr. C. E. Normand, professor of physics, bestowed upon the 135 seniors the caps and gowns which mark the official assumption of class privileges by the largest four-year class in the history of the school.

Events of the day continued with the annual senior breakfast, a special assembly at which former State Senator George N. Conrad spoke, and a formal banquet and reception in the evening.

Good morning! In 65 years we have seen foreign Legations in Washington become full-fledged Embassies. We have seen the population of the city grow from 100,000 to over half a million. And we have seen our store grow from a one-man establishment to an institution that serves the leading men of the country.

State Park Is Assured In Dominion

Virginia and U.S. Parley Ends Controversy Over Project.

Technicalities Will Be Checked by Peery at Once.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 8 (AP).—All the Chesterfield Recreational Park controversy was wiped away in a conference of Federal and State park authorities, local backers and Gov. Peery here today, and establishment of the park was virtually assured.

A working agreement was reached, save only a check of technicalities by Gov. Peery, who said that would be done at once.

The park will serve the cities of Richmond, Petersburg, Hopewell and their surrounding counties.

Under provisions of the agreement, which is preliminary to a formal lease, the Federal Government will acquire the land and develop it with CCC camps, and the State will continue the development and become responsible for the park maintenance when it is turned over to the Commonwealth.

Chairman William E. Carson of the Conservation and Development Commission said he was eager for the park, but had proceeded cautiously in the matter because he was anxious about the question whether the CCC camps would be available after March, 1935. Should they be withdrawn, he said, the Conservation and Development Commission would be left holding the park with no funds available for finishing the job.

Those promoting the park idea were heard by Lieut. Gov. James H. Price, Mayor Bright of Richmond and Senator W. O. Rogers, of Waverly. They asserted that after Tuesday's election there seemed to be no doubt about the continuance of appropriations for CCC camps.

Conrad Worth, representing the National Park Service, said all the Federal Government wanted was the assurance that the proper State agencies would support whatever State legislation was necessary to assure proper development and maintenance after the Federal Government had completed its part of the contract.

Painting a Decay Preventive.

Painting is the best preventive of decay of buildings, as rotting is due largely to lack of protection against weather and fungi growth. The wood becomes rough, small fissures appear, and cupping, warping and twisting follow. Paint should be of good quality and applied carefully for permanent results.

New Pastor

THE REV. C. B. JONES.

Manassas Pastor Takes Post Today

Rev. C. B. Jones Will Be Installed.

Manassas, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—The Rev. C. B. Jones, who has been called to replace the late Rev. C. P. Ryland, of the Mansassas Baptist Church, will be installed as pastor of that church at 7:45 p. m. tomorrow.

The following Manassas pastors will speak: The Rev. Mr. DeChant, of the Presbyterian Church; the Rev. Mr. Compton, of the Methodist Church, and the Rev. Mr. Kesner, of the United Brethren Church.

Col. Robert Hutchinson will make the installation address.

Randolph-Macon Officers Chosen

Cadet Leaders Named for Two Companies.

Front Royal, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—Col. John C. Boggs, principal of Randolph-Macon Academy, and Maj. Robert C. Rives, commandant, have announced appointments of cadet officers of the two companies in the cadet battalion.

Twenty-two appointments included the following:

Captains—Robert E. Davis, William M. Banks and Theodore Stansbury. Lieutenants—Adair Matthews, John Melville, jr., Walter Lohman, Richard Whiting and Austin Van Kirk. First sergeants—Edward Hauser and Marshall Picard. Color sergeants—Claude Miller and Edward Dering. Sergeant guides—William Olsen, Harry Samworth, Tom Wile and Norvelle Jones. Sergeants — Franklin Jenkins and George Hawthorne. Sergeant bugler—Walter Morriss. Corporal bugler—Miles Staley. Bugler—Howard Basile.

Route Offers Shortest Tour of Shenandoah National Park.

Harrisonburg, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—Gov. George C. Peery, of Virginia, and Gov. H. G. Kump, of West Virginia, will meet and exchange felicitations across the State line on top of the Shenandoah Mountain, 3,000 feet above sea level, at 12:30 p. m. tomorrow, after which they will deliver the principal addresses in celebration of the completion of a new modern highway connecting the two States.

In Virginia the new highway is an extension of Route No. 4 westward from Harrisonburg, Va., via Rawley Springs, to the State line on the mountain top, where it taps the highway which leads to Franklin, W. Va., thence to Harman, Elkins and the Ohio river, over what is known as West Virginia, Route No. 5.

The completed highway is the shortest route from Tidewater, Va., through Richmond, to the Ohio river. It passes through the heart of the Shenandoah National Park, the George Washington National Forest and the Monongehela National Forest.

The exercises will start at 11 o'clock with a band concert by the Harrisonburg Municipal Band. The morning addresses will be made by Representative A. Willis Robertson, of Virginia, and Representative Jennings Randolph, of West Virginia.

After a basket picnic on an adjoining mountain top plateau, the Governors will deliver their addresses. Federal Judge John Paul will introduce Gov. Peery, and Speaker Ralph Hiner, of the West Virginia House of Representatives, will introduce Gov. Kump.

Before going to the mountain top Gov. Peery will deliver an address to the student body of the Harrisonburg State Teachers College. He will be met at the city limits by a delegation of Harrisonburg citizens and escorted to the college and the road celebration.

John Flannagan Gets 787 Bristol Majority

Bristol, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—Bristol gave John W. Flannagan, jr., Democratic nominee for reelection to Congress in the Ninth Virginia District, a majority of 787 over his Republican rival, Fred C. Parks, in Tuesday's voting. Flannagan, a resident of Bristol, carried all three wards in the city. Bruce Crawford, Norton independent candidate, received but 42 votes here.

Grange Names New Officers, Awards Degree

Maurice Fox to Succeed G. F. Miles as Master; Pair Honored.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST,
P. O. Box 245, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Clarendon 126-J.

Maurice Fox last night was elected worthy master of Providence Grange for the year beginning in January, succeeding George F. Miles, who has held the post for two years. Henry Hawxhurst was chosen overseer; C. C. Carr, lecturer; George Speer, steward; Hubert Gerken, assistant steward; Mrs. George F. Miles, secretary; Miss Lillian Millan, treasurer; W. B. Davidson, chaplain; Mrs. F. C. Teichman, Pomona; Mrs. O. D. Moser, Ceres; Mrs. Ellen Smith, Flora, and Mrs. Maurice Fox, lady assistant steward; Ronald Blake, gatekeeper; Mrs. Henry Hawxhurst, organist.

The third and fourth degrees were conferred on Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Teichman. Reports from the State Grange meetings in Richmond in October were given by Mr. and Mrs. Fox.

Fourteen presidents and delegates from nine of the parent-teacher associations and school leagues of Fairfax County met last night at the home of Mrs. Carson Ryan, president of the Falls Church Parent-Teacher Association, and decided to form a county federation of the adult education groups. Definite organization of the new unit will be completed at a meeting to be held in Fairfax December 7. Each organization in the county will be asked to send two delegates.

Last night's meeting was addressed by County Superintendent of Schools W. T. Woodson, of Fairfax, and by J. H. Montgomery, executive secretary of the Cooperative Education Association, Virginia Branch of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers. Both speakers stressed the importance of unified action on problems affecting the parents and children throughout the county.

John W. Preston was chosen president of the School and Civic League of McLean, Va., at a meeting marking the twentieth anniversary of its organization. Elmer O. Fippen was elected first vice president; Mrs. J. Hunter Mack, second vice president; Alfred Souder, treasurer; Miss Elizabeth Matheny, corresponding secretary; the Rev. J. G. Sadtler, recording secretary; John Payne, custodian of league property, and Franklin Gicker, custodian of school property.

J. Stuart Ball, first president, outlined briefly the history of the league since its inception in November, 1914, when the small community was faced with the need of providing a school. E. O. Fippen, retiring president, gave a summary of the league's principal achievements during the last 10 years, and recommendations for changes in policy during the coming year.

Cooperation of the Vienna Town Council in rebuilding the town's dam and in construction of a 12,000-gallon cistern near the engine house to provide fire protection for the center of the corporation was promised Vernon Gowen and Lloyd E. Wright, a delegation from the Vienna Fire Department, at a meeting of the council this week. Joe Berry and W. W. Louk were appointed by Mayor Edgar Bennett to cooperate with the fire department in making the necessary dam repairs, authorized several years ago.

The Rev. W. D. Denham and the Rev. E. J. Shamhardt asked the council to give the Vienna Boy Scouts permission to use the old house on the Hines estate, fronting on Church street near the post-office, as troop headquarters. This building, now in disrepair, adjoins a portion of the Hines estate.

The council granted the Scouts a one-year lease on the building, the boys to pay the insurance premium, make the necessary repairs and clean up the adjoining grounds.

Councilmen Berry and Louk were appointed to investigate a request from C. Arthur Thompson that taxes paid on his property and that of Ben Thompson be used to repair the road on which their homes are located. A request of the Parent-Teacher Association for removal of the street light from the front of the Town Hall to the schoolhouse steps was granted.

Mayor Edgar Bennett announced the appointment of John H. Titus as town sergeant. Councilmen Joseph Berry and W. W. Louk were appointed to the road committee and Councilmen L. L. Freeman and Alton Moeny to the finance committee.

Councilman Stanley Twombley was elected president of the council. A bill of State Senator John Rust's for legal services in connection with the settlement of the Hines estate was laid on the table, as was a suggestion from Senator Rust that if funds are not available his fee be paid by land from the Hines estate.

The Sunday school of the Woodlawn Baptist Church will observe its seventy-fifth anniversary with a special program to be held in the church Sunday morning, beginning at 10:30 o'clock. The principal speaker will be the Rev. Arthur G. Slaght, of the Bible Institute of Washington.

Mrs. W. E. Arnold, sr., was yesterday elected president of the Missionary Society of the Langley Southern Methodist Church. Mrs. H. E. Hummer was chosen vice president; Mrs. Belle Matheny, corresponding secretary; Mrs. W. H. Dodge, recording secretary; Mrs. Orlando Whitley, treasurer; Miss Maud Hirst, superintendent of children's work; Mrs. L. H. Crowder, superintendent of mission study; Mrs. I. B. Faidley, superintendent of publicity; Mrs. Orris Gantt, superintendent of supplies; Mrs. Fannie Counselman, superintendent of Christian social relations; Mrs. Ward Kirby, treasurer of local work.

Miss Dorothy Dodge has been elected president of the Young People's Society of Langley Church. Miss Ethel Comer is the new vice president; Miss Eloise Faidley, secretary; Wesley Dodge, treasurer; Merle Crowder, chairman of missions, and Charles Dodge, chairman of publicity.

Rezoning Case Again Deferred At Alexandria

Owner of Property Seeks Permit for Change Into Apartments.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU,
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

The Alexandria City Council last night was unable to reach a decision on rezoning of the old Express Spark Plug property, on North Washington street. The discussion lasted two hours. The owner of the property, once a bottling works for the Portner Brewing Co., and originally a cotton factory, desires to convert it into an apartment house. The property first must be rezoned as "D" commercial, as it is in a residence zone.

Property owners on North Washington street, which is also the Mount Vernon Memorial highway, are not satisfied an apartment house would not be a detriment to their interests, and have taken the matter up with the National Park and Planning Commission, as well as filing a protest with the city council. Action again has been deferred. The park and planning body will examine plans and specifications for the proposed apartment house and report to the council.

Ernst & Ernst, certified public accountants, will audit the books of the city annually for $1,500, according to a resolution offered by the finance committee. This firm has handled the city audit previously.

Numbers Game Target.

The "numbers" game will be broken up in Alexandria if a new ordinance can be enforced strictly. This ordinance refers to this form of gambling, which has not been covered heretofore, arrests having been under an ordinance covering gambling in general.

The additional PWA loan of $60,000 for completion of the new $300,000 high school building has been approved, according to City Attorney Carl Budwesky. The city will issue only $39,000 in bonds for this loan, there being a grant of $31,000. This makes $360,000 in all borrowed for school purposes, of which more than $300,000 will be spent on the new high school.

Unpaid tythe and personal property taxes for 1922 to 1932 will be charged off the city's books as uncollectible, according to the finance committee's recommendation. The city collector, however, will be instructed to continue his efforts to collect the money, the charge off being for accounting purposes.

The report of A. W. Boehringer, emergency relief director for Alexandria, for October, submitted yesterday, shows a total expenditure for relief purposes of $4,586.03, divided as follows: Work relief, $3,409.18; direct relief, $479.72; administration, $697.13. The balnace on hand October 1 was $963.81. FERA funds received during the month totaled $4,450.

This amount included that expended for care of indigent persons at the Manassas District Home, the Children's Home and Day Nursery, and care of indigent persons in Alexandria.

Tickets for the "deficit dance," to be given in the Alexandria Armory November 23 by the National Firemen's Association to take care of a deficit in expenses of the Labor Day parade, were placed on sale yesterday. The deficit, approximately $2,000, was created by a failure to sell seats because of rain.

D. L. Altman, 43, of Belmont, Va., and P. L. Sullivan, 48, of Paytes, Va., are in the Alexandria Hospital as the result of an automobile accident near Fort Humphreys early yesterday. Altman suffered a broken leg, cuts and bruises, and Sullivan a fractured kneecap and deep cuts.

Armistice Day will be observed in the Alexandria High School and George Mason High School today. Members of Alexandria Post, No. 24, American Legion, will conduct flag-raising ceremonies at the Alexandria High School at 8:45 a. m. Col. Clarence Deems, jr., will speak.

At noon J. Randall Caton, jr., will address the students of the Alexandria High School, and Francis H. Fannon will speak at the George Mason High at 2:30 p. m. Both represent the American Legion post.

Maj. Gen. John H. Russell, U. S. M. C., the highest ranking officer in that corps, will speak at the public observance of the 159th anniversary of the corps in Gadsby's Tavern at 8 p. m. tomorrow. Gen. Russell will be accompanied by several other high-ranking officers.

Miss Esther Trogler Heishley died yesterday at her home, 124 South Fairfax street, after a heart attack. She was the daughter of the late John Frederick and Catherine Heishley, and for several years had been employed as bookkeeper at the banking house of Burke & Herbert. She is survived by four sisters, Mrs. Edward L. Fox, Miss Mary Heishley, Mrs. Ruth Peterson and Miss Bertha Heishley, and a brother, Philip Heishley.

Alexandria Chapter, American Red Cross, will meet at 4 p. m. today in the office of Roger C. Sullivan, city treasurer and president of the chapter.

Prince Georges Holds 'Inaugural Ball' Tonight

Victorious Prince Georges County Democrats will celebrate their successful political conquest with an "inaugural ball" tonight at the Beaver Dam Country Club, Landover, Md.

The ball will be sponsored by the Young Democratic Club of Southern Maryland, of which Thomas E. Jones, of Bradbury Heights is president. The Democratic Party filled every contested county office except that of register of wills. The office of county surveyor was filled by Thomas E. Latimer, Republican unopposed.

McShea Takes Kelley's Job on County Board

New Official Has Lived in Arlington for More Than 30 Years.

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST,
Tel. Clar. 500. Clarendon, Va.

William E. A. McShea, of Fort Myer Heights, yesterday was appointed member of the county board by Judge Walter T. McCarthy. McShea took the oath of office before Mrs. Rachel White, deputy clerk of the court. He has resided in the county for more than 30 years.

McShea fills the vacancy caused by the removal of Lyman M. Kelley, chairman of the board, who was found guilty by a jury on October 19 of soliciting a bribe from Clyde C. Lamond, president of the Clarendon Trust Co., and accepting a bribe from Roger Daniels, who at one time held a contract with Arlington County for the removal of refuse. Kelley was removed last Saturday after Judge Frederick W. Colman had refused to consider the motion by counsel to set aside the verdict.

An application for a writ of mandamus against Judge Coleman to restrain him from removing Kelley has been filed with the Supreme Court of Appeals for Virginia. A hearing on the writ has been set for November 13.

For 22 years McShea was a member of the county school board. He took an active part in the building program ten years ago which resulted in carrying a school bond issue for $750,000 used in the construction of schoolhouses.

Two years ago he retired as foreman of plumbing and heating for Public Parks and Buildings, in which department he served 16 years. He was a member of the general supply committee which awarded all contracts for plumbing and engineering supplies used by the Federal Government. Prior to entering the Government service he was for 22 years plumber foreman for James Nolan & Sons, of Washington.

With funds to carry on welfare work in Arlington during the winter practically exhausted, Mrs. Cora Miles, chairman of the welfare board appeals to the citizens to to make their contributions early. All funds should be sent direct to Mrs. Mae E. Jacobs, superintendent of public welfare, at her office in the courthouse.

Records reveal that monthly expenditures this year have been about $1,500. With demands increasing almost daily the needs will be far greater this year.

Grange at Haymarket To Convene Tonight

Haymarket, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—The Bull Run Grange will meet tomorrow night with the Rev. Frank Carpentier presiding.

Reports of the State convention in Richmond will be made by Mrs. Frank Carpentier, Mrs. Charles Rector and Miss Mildred Yewell.

Prince Georges Clerks Labor On Vote Tally

Prince Georges County election supervisors last night were laboring for a final tally of the county vote.

Samuel A. Wyvill, clerk of election supervisors, declared they expected to finish before midnight. The Circuit Court room at Upper Marlboro had been turned into the "counting house," and spectators sought vantage points on courtroom benches.

Bewail Passing of Ritchie.

While there was jubilation among Democrats over their showing for the county ticket—they lost but two offices to the Republicans—many among them were searching for a wailing wall against which they might sob their grief over the passing of "Bert" Ritchie and, incidentally, his patronage, which now goes into the hands of the Republican State central committee.

Democrats were wondering what Governor-elect Harry W. Nice will do when it comes to gubernatorial appointments as justices of the peace, Judge of the Prince Georges County Circuit Police Court, now held by Waldo Burnside; the county board of education; one of three members of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, and the chairman of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission. George N. Palmer, of Seat Pleasant, now is chairman of the latter organization.

There is one ray of hope, some of the Democrats pointed out, in that any appointments by Mr. Nice will have to be ratified by the State Senate, which is predominantly Democratic.

Two Offices to G. O. P.

The office of county surveyor went to Thomas E. Latimer, Hyattsville Republican, in whose family the position has been retained for generations. He was unopposed.

That of register of wills was lost to the Republican incumbent, William A. Davis, by a small margin. Mr. Davis has held the office for 16 years. He was opposed by W. R. C. Connick, retired Baden School principal.

Another question to present itself was the filling of positions left vacant by officials elected to other positions. There are two of these to be filled—the one to be left by the election of Perry Boswell, president of the board of education, to county commissioner, and the one left vacant by the election of Mayor John H. Beall of Mount Rainier to judge of the orphans court.

70-Foot Flagpole Given Maryland U.

New Staff to Be Erected by Alumni, Students.

Plans have been completed at the University of Maryland for the erection of a new 70-foot steel flagpole, to be set by a brick and concrete base.

The flagpole will be the gift of last year's graduating class, the Alumni Association and the Student Government Association. Dedication ceremonies will be held alumni day, May 4, 1935.

The new flagpole will be erected either on the site of the present flagpole, or on an axis between the library, agricultural building and men's dormitory.

Bronze plaques, which at one time were part of the old Memorial gateway, and which contain the names of founders and the board of trustees of the university, will be placed at the base of the new structure.

Caught in Machinery, Worker Near Death

John Kidd, 60, of the 500 block of Twelfth street, southeast, an employe of the District Highway Department, was injured critically yesterday when his overalls caught on the crank shaft of a steam roller he was cranking, and he was hurled into the machinery.

Physicians at Casualty Hospital said he suffered a badly mangled left shoulder and left arm, a possible skull fracture and possible internal injuries. They held slight hope for his recovery.

Fusionists Win Board Control In Montgomery

Patronage Handling Goes to Republican State Committee.

Fusionists will control the Board of County Commissioners in Montgomery County, complete unofficial returns indicated last night.

Control of the board carries with it much of the patronage of the county, including the county police force and the Liquor Control Board, both of which have large corps of employes.

Sheriff G. Eddington Bell locked one Fusionist and one Democrat in the Rockville courthouse top floor jail with the ballot boxes for the night after a vigorous protest had been made by Paul Coughlan, Fusion county commissioner elect over the storing of the boxes in the EWA offices in the courthouse.

Row Over Ballots.

With Clayton K. Watkins, clerk of the circuit court, and F. Byrne Austin, clerk of the board of election supervisors, the sheriff supervised the transfer of the boxes from the EWA offices to the jail.

Fusion and Democratic leaders were squabbling over every doubtful ballot as the heated counting reached its conclusion, according to reports from the room where the election returns were being canvassed.

Together with the loss of State prestige through the election of Harry W. Nice, the election was a hard blow to county Democrats. State patronage hereafter will be controlled through the Republican State Central Committee.

The Fusion Party elected only six candidates, but the three places they gained on the Board of Commissioners placed them in a strong strategic position. They also gained a seat on the Orphans' Court bench and two places in the House of Delegates.

Pugh-Dawson Race Close.

Regular Democrats captured the remaining 15 places although the narrowness of the vote in the battle for State's attorney between James A. Pugh, Democrat, and Walter W. Dawson left Fusionists hope for Dawson's election when the official count is finished. On the unofficial count Pugh has a plurality of 16 over Dawson, who is chairman of the Republican State committee.

It is expected that should the official canvass, which began at noon yesterday, reveal that the plurality was so small Dawson probably would ask for a recount.

The Fusionists who won places on the Board of County Commissioners were: Charles E. King, who defeated John B. Diamond, incumbent, by 224 votes; Frank H. Karn, who defeated Raleigh S. Chinn, Democrat, by 252 votes, and Paul Coughlan, former Silver Spring postmaster, who defeated Miss Lavinia Engle, Democrat, by 984 votes. Coughlan polled 10,563 votes, the largest number cast for county commissioner.

Other Commissioners.

The other two places on the board were taken by Richard H. Lansdale, who defeated William H. Fulks, his Fusion opponent, by 944 votes, and Robert D. Hagner, who topped Samuel Stonebraker by 95 votes.

Diamond late yesterday protested to the board of election supervisors and the board of canvassers that the Darnestown Precinct had not accounted for 15 ballots which had been cast there. The board of supervisors also called the election officials from Poolesville to their office in Rockville last night to explain discrepancies found in their tally sheets.

Joseph A. Cantrel, who led the Fusion campaign speakers, and Walter M. Magruder won two places in the House of Delegates for the Fusionists, while T. Yellott Canby, Richard S. Hays and Miss Ruth Elizabeth Shoemaker, Democrats, captured the three other places.

Democrats Keep Control.

Death-Car Driver Is Assessed $110

Operator of Truck in Fatal Crash Freed.

Austin Young, driver of the car which crashed into a telephone pole on the Washington-Richmond highway, south of the Highway Bridge, early on October 22, killing Miss Katherine Breckenridge, of Washington, pleaded guilty to reckless driving charges in Arlington County Court yesterday. He was fined $100 and costs, totaling $110.25.

Since no charges were preferred against Claude Rogers, operator of the truck which struck Owen L. Carter, injuring him fatally Wednesday morning, on the Washington-Richmond highway near Columbia pike, he was released after a county court hearing yesterday.

Virginia Postmaster Begins His 42d Year

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 8.—Samuel R. Gault has begun his forty-second year as postmaster at Scottsville. He was first appointed to office during the second administration of Grover Cleveland. Previously he had served as assistant postmaster. He has served under every President since the days of Benjamin Harrison. In point of service, Mr. Gault is the oldest postmaster in the State.

Students Avoid Anti-War Body

Maryland U. Association Reserves Recognition of League.

The University of Maryland Student Government Association will not recognize as delegates any students who attend the National Student's League anti-war conference, it was announced yesterday.

After a meeting of the student government's executive council, Warren Tydings, president of the student body, issued a formal statement reserving recognition of the league.

The statement declared the executive council "did not desire to affiliate with or support this conference until the sponsors on this campus are organized under student government supervision, and until the executive council has acquainted itself with the policies of the national and local organizations sponsoring the conference."

The conference will be held this week-end at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore. Handbills distributed by convention officials declared the aim included the abolishment of the Reserve Officers Training Corps from schools.

Slum Project Approved.

Final authorization to a low cost housing and slum clearance project in Louisville was given yesterday by the Public Works Administration. The Department of Justice, officials said, would begin condemnation proceedings against three blocks of land on which houses will be built for white families. The project will cost about $1,500,000.

Truck Upsets, Killing Driver

Staunton Man Is Victim as Road Shoulder Collapses.

Staunton, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—James Edward Sadler, 32, was killed today when an oil and gasoline truck went over an embankment on a country road in Nelson County. The weight of the vehicle caused the shoulder of the soil roadway to collapse. The truck turned over several times. Sadler suffered a broken neck.

Sadler was covering his motor fuel delivery route in Nelson County. The body was brought to Staunton late this afternoon.

Sadler, a resident of Staunton for 20 years, is survived by his mother, Mrs. B. A. Sadler, of this city; a brother, J. William Sadler, Roanoke, and a sister, Mrs. Jackson Burns, Washington.

Theresa Helburn, Theater Guild Executive, Allies Herself With Columbia Films

First Woman Of the Theater Signs Contract

Picture Work Begins Jan. 1 'Merry Widow' Again; Amusement Notes.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Under a long-term contract, which already has been distantly celebrated in this space and which becomes effective January 1, 1935, Theresa Helburn, one of the genuinely distinguished women of the American theater—playwright, director and member of the New York Theater Guild executive board—will spend eight months a year in an important executive capacity at the West Coast studios of Columbia Pictures. The remaining four months she will continue to devote to her work with the Guild.

Her film activities will be conducted as a close official associate of Harry Cohn, president of Columbia.

The consummation of this contract is the direct result of a three-month period of observation and study of the motion picture industry, as it functions in the hotbeds of Hollywood, put in by Miss Helburn at Columbia last summer, at which time it was first remarked here that she seemed inclined to follow Phillip Moeller, one of the Theater Guild's foremost directors, into the picture field.

Long With the Guild.

Identified with the Theater Guild from the very time of its inception, some 15 years or more ago, Miss Helburn has had an active part in the production of more than 100 plays, many of which she personally directed. More than any other single member of the executive board of the Guild, she has steadied the ship in times of storm and been the balance wheel—not to mix a metaphor too seriously—that has kept the craft on an even keel.

Thus, Miss Helburn has had an active hand in shaping the careers of some of the most notable of the current theater's stars and featured players, among them Lynn Fontanne and Alfred Lunt, Helen Hayes, Katharine Hepburn, Edward G. Robinson and Eva Le Gallienne.

Staged Notable Plays.

Included in the list of distinguished offerings that owe their origin largely to the perspicacity of this energetic and erudite woman, are such luminous works as "Mary of Scotland," the Guild's foremost success of last season; "Ah, Wilderness," the Eugene O'Neill play coming to the National on Monday, with George M. Cohan in the stellar role; "Biography," the S. N. Behrman comedy in which Ina Claire scored such a hit; "Strange Interlude," "Reunion in Vienna" and "Mourning Becomes Electra."

Not a few of these were sufficiently revolutionary in content and treatment to require something of productional courage ever to find their way to the boards. This intrepid spirit of adventure in the playhouse had its genesis largely in the fertile brain of Theresa Helburn.

Columbia is to be congratulated—and hereby is.

Phil Lampkin, the gymnastic and smiling baton-swisher presiding over the artistic destinies of the excellent orchestra at Loew's Fox Theater, yesterday came along with the rest of us Scorpios and celebrated his twenty-ninth birthday. A native of California, in which Golden State one hears he is now engaged in acquiring enough acreage to be classified as a "ranch"—strawberry, horse, cow or pickle, we wouldn't know—Phil is one of the youngest and most successful of the maestros dedicating their talents to the perpetuation of the legend of good music in the movie houses. In response to numerous inquiries, it is divulging no secret that he recently was unshackled from the ball and chain, if you know what I mean.

That "Merry Widow" Again.

Through the agency of Mr. Farley's gray-clad itinerants we find ourself mildly upbraided for not having remembered that the last local revival of "The Merry Widow" was not at the National Theater eight or ten years ago, "but two years ago at Poli's."

This at least semicordial correction should be paid no heed, since it is signed "A. C. Ritic," which, obviously, is only a thinly disguised spelling of "a critic," and this department usually observes the rule to ignore anonymous communications, but in this instance the contention is not of such substantial fiber as to hold water.

The demolition of Poli's Theater set in as far back as March 5, 1931, and it is, therefore, a trifle difficult to recall that "The Merry Widow" played there "but two years ago."

"A. C. Ritic" happily concedes that the Ernst Lubitsch celluloid version of the Franz Lehar operetta, current at Loew's Palace, is quite a picture. That, after all, was the only contention.

Speaking of "The Merry Widow"—and who can deny that we have been as much as it seems to deserve of late?—an international broadcast of "The Merry Widow" music, directed by Franz Lehar, composer of the original operetta, will take place from Vienna on Sunday with reception throughout the United States over the Columbia network. The program will be rebroadcast in Central and South America, Australia, South Africa and the Far East.

The broadcast will occupy a half-hour from 7 to 7:30 p. m., New York time, over Station WABC, and will feature the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra and Richard Tauber, regarded as one of the world's outstanding tenor soloists. Franz Lehar will conduct the symphony orchestra which he has so frequently directed in Viennese concerts. This is the first international broadcast of one of the most famous musical organizations.

Maj. Edward Bowes, director of the Capitol family programs, will act as master of ceremonies for the Columbia network. A greater number of listeners is anticipated than for any program broadcast over the radio chain since its inception.

Is a "Best-Selling" Heroine

Josephine Hutchinson, former Washingtonian and member of the Ram's Head Players, when that semi-amateur group flourished under the direction of "Bobby" Bell, having just scored emphatically with Dick Powell on the Earle screen in "Happiness Ahead," in this photograph gives a vague idea of how she will look in a huge black beret as the heroine of W. Somerset Maugham's "The Right to Live." This popular fiction is now being registered in celluloid at Warner Brothers studios in Burbank, Calif.

Ted Tiller Inaugural.

The Man-Tilla Players open their 1934-35 season Tuesday evening at 8:30 o'clock, with "A Murder Has Been Arranged," directed by John Mann, to be presented in the Man-Tilla Players' Club, which would be the auditorium of the Immaculate Conception Church, on N street, between Seventh and Eighth northwest.

The cast for this strange English mystery play, concerning a London theater haunted with ghosts, includes Ann Garrett as Miss Groze, Wilbur Betts, as Cavendish; Mabel Owens Wilcox, as Mrs. Wragg; Theodore Tiller 2d, as Jimmy North; Anne Yago, as Mrs. Arthur; Wilma Flood, as the mystery woman; George Odell, as Sir Charles Jasper; John Mann, as Maurice Mullins, and Marie McIntyre in the role of Beatrice Jasper.

Frank Stevenson's Orchestra, under the management of Floyd Sparks, has been engaged for the performance, which runs three nights—November 13, 14 and 15.

Tickets are on sale at Mrs. Dorsey's Concert Bureau and the Willard Ticket Bureau.

Orchestra and balcony reservations, at 83 cents and 55 cents, respectively, may be made through Col. 5254, or at the box office the nights of performance.

It is Stanley R. Chase, manager of the advertising sales department of Paramount Pictures in Washington, who takes the trouble to let this desk know that Joe Oulahan, for 11 years salesman for Paramount out of the Washington branch exchange office, becomes branch manager of the Cincinnati, Ohio, exchange on Monday. Mr. Oulahan is well-known among the local "film row" personnel and his deserved preferment will be widely applauded by all who have had dealings with him during his long tour of duty in the Capital. Congratulations, fella.

Ellington Will Broadcast.

Duke Ellington and his orchestra, who come to Loew's Fox Theater today, will do their part in aiding the local Community Chest drive by presenting a special program over WJSV Monday night, November 12, starting at 11 p. m.

Ellington, a local boy, has arranged many specialty numbers for this program.

Ellington's services for this broadcast have been donated by himself, the Fox Theater and Irving Mills, his agent. The Musicians Union of Washington released the musicians for this program and the Columbia Broadcasting Co. donated the time on WJSV.

Vague Memory Note.

One recalls something about WJSV in the middle of the night, yesterday morning at 10:45. Do you talk in your sleep, too?

Straight From the Studios

Diana Wynyard Seems Temporarily Lost to Screen; Otto Kruger Captures a Nice Assignment; Previews and Gossip in Hollywood.

By Edwin Schallert.

Hollywood, Nov. 8.—Diana Wynyard is destined for a long stay in London, according to present forecasts. Those who have seen her play in "The Bar Sinister" on the stage there prophesy that it will prove a lasting success, probably enduring for six months.

GRETA GARBO

That will prevent Miss Wynyard from returning to M.-G.-M., of course, to fulfill her film contract. But as she was used so very little at that studio during her previous sojourn, rather unfortunately, she will probably be allowed liberal leeway in carrying out her footlight engagement.

Miss Wynyard's last screen production was "One More River," which was made at Universal Studios. She was at one time slated for "Vanessa," which is now to star Helen Hayes.

Mad Husband No Longer Problem.

All the indecision over the actor to play the mad husband in "Vanessa" is, by the way, over now. Otto Kruger has been selected. His will be the second lead in the picture. Robert Montgomery is the more romantic character in the plot. Various actors were considered for the difficult part of the husband in "Vanessa," including John Barrymore and Frank Morgan. Kruger's competency to fill this part was demonstrated in the tests for the picture. "Vanessa" is being prepared for the screen under the supervision of its author, Hugh Wampole. It will be Miss Hayes' first release following "What Every Woman Knows."

Miss Venable to Re-sign to Paramount.

All ready for signing, it's said, is a new contract for Evelyn Venable with Paramount. The old agreement you may recall was disaffirmed by Miss Venable because it was executed while she was under age, and the company had not had the document ratified before a judge or by Miss Venable's father. Miss Venable thought seriously of returning to the stage in a play called "Symphony," which is to be directed in New York by Felix Weissberger, of the Reinhardt forces. Now, it is practically certain that she will continue in pictures. It is understood that Al Kaufman was able to prevail on her to return, and that the company has much larger plans for the young lady who was schooled in Shakespearean tradition. At present, she is finishing in the Will Rogers feature, "The County Chairman." It is probable the contract will be closed in the next few days.

Believable Grant Also Is Found.

The right actor to impersonate Gen. Grant on the screen has, it is believed, been found. From present indications the role will go to James Barton, who is now appearing in "The Tobacco Road," in which he succeeded Henry Hull. The play, "Mr. Grant," was purchased by RKO from the author, Arthur Goodrich, and will likely be made into a picture in the near future. It is a human study of the great military figure of the Civil War. The price reported paid for the subject was $22,500.

A New Garbo Emerges.

The conviction can be expressed that there is a new Greta Garbo on the screen. A more human and more sensitive Garbo—one who projects more of light as well as shadow in her work. There is less of sheer glamour, more depth. "The Painted Veil" further discloses the personality of this star that was initially revealed in "Queen Christiana." The medium for her talents is not better, I would say, but more familiar. The plot of the picture is a Garbo plot—the story of the woman torn between different loves.

After a start in Europe the local shifts to China, and in that exotic atmosphere the star naturally flourishes. However, it is the light Garbo of the earlier stages who is very charming and different. The production itself is interesting. The costumes of the star are unfortunately rather ridiculously exaggerated and brought the suggestion of a laugh at times. Herbert Marshall stresses the note of pathos in his portrayal, while George Brent gives an impersonation of a gayer order, which is very good. Warner Oland, Jean Hersholt, Beulah Bondi and Katherine Alexander are among the others in the picture directed by Richard Boleslavsky.

Do you know that the Community Chest made it possible for these Clinics and Dispensaries to take care of 259,845 people who could afford to pay little or nothing for treatment?

Do you know that the Chest contribution for these services during the last fiscal year amounted to $315,258.45?

Without this money and without the Voluntary Service of our leading physicians and surgeons, which are donated without charge, these hospitals would either have to close their clinics and wards, or make a charge which would be prohibitive to those least able to pay.

G. U., Seeking Fourth Victory, Slight Favorite Over Roanoke Tonight

This Morning...

With Shirley Povich

AMONG the men holding other than a washroom decision over Huey Long is "Biff" Jones, the former Washington youth who is head coach of the Louisiana team that plays George Washington University at Griffith Stadium on Saturday. But the decision didn't stick.

"BIFF" JONES.

Imagine "Biff" Jones' surprise three years ago, when he assumed the coaching duties at Louisiana State, to discover that the Kingfish, as Governor of the State, had taken over the football team and was issuing orders from the bench. On the well-founded theory that politics and football mixed as nicely as the proverbial cobra and the mongoose, Coach Jones took his official life in his hands and ordered Gov. Long from the bench.

Imagine Jones' surprise, too, when Huey took the order lying down, as it were, and quit the bench for the grandstands. But before he quit, Huey left the warning to Jones that "I'll stay in the stands as long as you win, but I'll be back if you hit a losing streak."

Bounces Back on the Bench.

Well, Huey apparently was satisfied with the performance of the L. S. U. team during the past two years, but this season his enthusiasm for football quite overcame him. Back on the bench he bounced as United States Senator Long, and, with the Louisiana players regarding him as a lucky omen, Coach Jones is not disposed to order him off, even if he had the authority, which he hasn't.

With the irrepressible Kingfish leading the cheers, exhorting the players and otherwise inspiring the team, Louisiana State is definitely pointed to an undefeated season, hailed as the Nation's greatest drawing card of the season. If Huey sticks with the team, even the Rose Bowl committee may be constrained to overlook his crack that the Tournament of Roses game is only a real estate proposition and invite Louisiana State to the Coast.

On the mere suspicion that the Kingfish will decide at the last moment to accompany the Louisiana team to Washington for the game Saturday, G. W. U. is counting on the greatest crowd of Washington football history. Abe Mickal is the team's All-American back field candidate, but Huey is Louisiana's All-American turnstile twirler.

Fleming Likes Chris Cagle.

"Biff" Jones' assertion that his man Mickal is a greater back and a better passer than was his Chris Cagle at Army fell like heresy on the ears of Maj. Phil Fleming yesterday at a reunion of Army football men. Maj. Fleming, who now owns one of the longest titles in the New Deal alphabet by virtue of his position as deputy administrator of the public works fund of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, or something, was graduate manager of athletics when Jones was head coach of West Point, and when Cagle was the incomparable star of the Army teams.

Maj. Fleming has never seen Mickal perform, but he is still staking his judgment on Cagle as the greatest passer in football history. He remembers Cagle's plebe year at West Point when the youth who was to become a unanimous All-American choice was a colossal flop on the gridiron.

Cagle came to West Point unsolicited, according to Fleming, merely bearing a letter from his coach at Southwestern University to the effect that he would make Army a great quarter back. On the strength of this recommendation, Jones played him at quarter back, only to see him fall dismally. It was only when three regulars of the back field were injured on a Saturday of Cagle's second year and they were forced to insert him at half back that he got his chance to set football circles buzzing with his passing and running.

More Mail.

"My Dear Mr. Povich: After reading Maj. Patterson's letter, I still think you were justified in calling the boys from the Northeastern College the silk-stockinged crew.

"I am defending the poor 75 per cent of the students from high school or prep school whom the major left to fight for themselves with his assertion that Dartmouth accepted only those students whose grades were in the upper 25 per cent of their class.

"Do you think the major would want only the upper 25 per cent to fight in his army? No, I think the average or slightly above average students would be preferred, not the bookworms. I mean the boys who can go out and whale the ball over the fence. And besides, if all colleges would take only the upper 25 per cent, what would the rest of us do for an education?

Please correct the major on (1) his statement concerning Big Ten teams playing G. W. U. Iowa played George Washington in 1931 and 1932 and had to meet G. W.'s requirements; (2) and his insinuation that G. W.'s entrance requirements are low. It would be wise for him to look these up.

Yours very truly,

L. T. BURN.

Colgate-Tulane Contest Billed as '34 Season's Best

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8 (Spl.).—If it is true that this year the public is buying football, rather than tradition and old grads waving their hats in sentimental song, there ought to be a standing room only sign pinned to the Yankee Stadium around 2:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon. For potentially, the best football game of the season is scheduled to be played there—Colgate vs. Tulane, one of the best teams of the North against one of the best in the South. It is a money game, pure and simple, because if it weren't, it would be played either at Hamilton, N. Y., or New Orleans, La. It is also a reputation game. The boys won't be out there perishing for dear old alma mammy so much as for an invitation to that famous flower carnival at Pasadena, Calif., on New Year's Day. Football is becoming more and more complicated.

In the old days it was sufficient to break a leg for your coach, some one usually called "The Old Man," and breathe your last for the beloved school. Today the youth of the land partitions himself more generously.

Is Not Surprising.

If he misses a pass or drops a punt or charges headlong into a place where there is no hole it is not surprising, for he is playing with one eye cocked up into the press box where the All-American experts are rating him, and the other optic slung clean out to California, where the Rose Bowl, a visit to the movie studios chaperoned by movie queens and untold publicity await him. He will give an ankle for half a column in the Sunday papers, a kneecap for that coaching job when he graduates, and his collar bone for the mortgage on the stadium, or the new fieldhouse. But I am getting away from my thesis.

If we get any kind of a break with the weather, a dry field and a fine day, you will see or should see the best football game of the season, two different styles of play, one, Tulane's, all forward dash, speed, slashing attack, direct progress, the other, Colgate's deception, hocus pocus, trickery behind the line of scrimmage designed to shake one man loose in a surprise thrust for the goal line.

Fools Spectators.

And for this sort of thing there is no more fascinating team in the country to watch than Colgate.

Sometime, when your youngster brings in his football, take it, look at it, and then try to hide it about your person. The Colgate back field manages to conceal the ball on practically every play so well that half the time the spectators in the stands who have a bird's eye view of the proceedings have no idea who has it, let alone the players of the opposing team. It is for this Long to Urge That Gophers Play L. S. U.

Predicts $150,000 Gate for Charity; Receives Many Challenges.

By Jimmy Powers.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8 (Spl.).—A challenge to Minnesota to play Louisiana State University in Yankee Stadium on any agreed Saturday afternoon in December and a scornful command to "boll weevil teams" to stay out of the way of a North-South gridiron championship series kept Senator Huey P. Long in the football spotlight today.

The Kingfish is dead serious about bringing his boys into New York. He wants to play a game here this year—and if his club is still undefeated—a return game in New Orleans next year with the gate split equally among the relief funds of the two cities.

Gate of $150,000.

"I am going to challenge Minnesota," said the Kingfish today, "and see if we can get around the Big Ten regulations which prohibit postseason games. I have been led to believe, unofficially, that Minnesota would like to play us. The gate this game can create will be $150,000. If we can create this money on one Saturday afternoon, why toss it overboard? It will help a lot of poor here in New Orleans and up North."

The Kingfish said he and his boys would be tickled to come to New York. "You see they have had a tough schedule, and a trip to the

Vacarro Only Varsity Man Missing

Parcells and Herron on Ailing List, but Are Slated to Start.

Visitors Boast Heavy Line and Capable Back Field.

EVERYTHING revamped but its optimistic attitude, Georgetown goes ahuntin' for its fourth victory of the season tonight at Griffith Stadium, opposing Roanoke College at 8 o'clock.

Chagrined by their failure to bring back Richmond's scalp after leading the Spiders until the last two minutes of play, the Hilltoppers will endeavar to regain their lost prestige by a convincing victory over tonight's opponent. On paper Georgetown is a favorite, but not by much.

Although many of the regulars are afflicted with minor injuries only one, Vacarro, will be absent from the starting line-up. His tackle position will be filled by Cy Cummings, a 200-pound youngster who played great ball in the previous games.

Parcells Will Play.

Chubby Parcells will be at quarter back despite a slight ankle injury, and Wally Herron is slated to assume his regular half back position although still feeling the affects of a wrenched back.

Although he intended to make a shift at right end, Head Coach Jack Hagerty last night decided to start Joe Shields instead of removing him for Ed Bodine. Bodine, ordinarily a half back, will go into action should the team resort to an aerial attack. He is a better pass receiver than Shields, though the latter plays a better defensive game.

Has Heavy Line.

Roanoke will present a heavy line which has stopped virtually every rushing attack thrown against it this season, and a back field that can handle the leather. If the Maroon runs true to form tonight it will make the evening a dull one for the locals. Usually after losing a game the Virginians come right back and win one. Last week they took a 14-13 defeate from Apprentice School.

Roanoke operates with the Warner system of double and single wing backs. It has Pitzer, Patrone and Smith to supply the necessary power, and Weeks, a smart field general, to direct.

Irish May Play Harvard in '36

Report Says Holy Cross Might Be Dropped.

BOSTON, Nov. 8 (AP).—The Boston Evening Globe says that if present plans materialize the Harvard Football Team may play Notre Dame or Michigan in 1936.

This report, the Globe says, followed the announcement that Harvard would drop Holy Cross from its football schedule after next year's game although athletic relations between the two were still friendly.

For major games under the new schedule, the Globe said, Yale and Dartmouth were regarded as certainties with Princeton and West Point probable, and Notre Dame and Michigan likely.

Meade Knocked Unconscious By Woman Frightened by Toy

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, Nov. 8 (Spl.).—Jockey Don Meade, leading rider of the meeting, suffered a 4-inch gash over his left temple this afternoon when struck with a china plate thrown by "Chicken Ann" Williams colored, who operates the lunchroom in the jockey's quarters.

Meade, the Ventura, Calif., boy who rides for the elaborate E. R. Bradley stable, brought a rubber snake to the track today and frightened several of his fellow riders, including Charley Kurtsinger and Joey Renick. Later he tossed the snake over the shoulder of the colored woman, who was drying a plate. She threw the plate away from her madly and it hit Meade flush on the temple, knocking him senseless.

The unconscious jockey was carried to the track hospital, where first aid was given to stop the flow of blood. After being revived, Meade complained of severe headache and was ordered by the track physician to stay in his Baltimore apartment for the afternoon.

Meade was whisked away, but as Starter Milton walked to the sixteenth pole for the start of the sixth race, the Bradley jockey was by his side. With a turban of bandages, he climbed to the starting platform and stayed until the field was away.

It may be several days before he returns to the saddle, however.

Colonials Work Hard For Louisiana State

WORKING feverishly to obtain power and rhythm for tomorrow's game with Louisiana State, George Washington coaches drove their charges at a furious pace yesterday until well after dusk, and concluded with one major change in the first team setup.

Bill Brewer, who played full back against Vanderbilt last week, was shifted to guard, replacing Sid Kolker, and Harvey Pettit went to full back.

Speed and Blocking Factors.

Brewer's speed and blocking ability determined the change. Kolker has not been coming out of the line satisfactorily. Last week Leemans repeatedly found himself stopped by his own teammates who clogged up holes and stumbled over one another.

Pettit is no newcomer at full back. A pile-driving back with speed and an abundance of raw courage, he should be a valuable asset to the Colonial attack tomorrow.

The back field will be completed with Jenkins at quarter back and Ben Plotnicki at the other half back. After much experimenting, the coaches decided that this group represented G. W.'s smoothest and most powerful ball-carrying group.

Works Out at Atlanta.

Louisiana worked out yesterday at Atlanta, boarding the train which will bring them to Washington immediately after. The squad, 35 men in all, will arrive at 11:30 a. m., and will be quartered at the Shoreham. This afternoon Biff Jones will send the team through a light workout at the stadium.

George Washington's home-coming program will be inaugurated this afternoon at 4:30 o'clock with a rally in the gym. Charles S. Baker, president of the General Alumni Association, and Dr. Cloyd Marvin will address the students.

Tonight at 9 o'clock the annual home-coming ball will be held at the Willard Hotel. The University Glee Club, Bert Bagranoff, former G. W. gridman, and Roland Logan, assistant coach, will offer a program of vocal entertainment.

A program of outdoor sports will be offered by the women's department tomorrow morning between 9 and 12 o'clock on the Ellipse.

Kipke Holds Drills.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Nov. 8 (AP). Coach Harry Kipke let his Wolverine gridders off easy today with a session devoted principally to pass defense. Although this department has been Michigan's weakness thus far this season, the regulars showed encouraging improvement this afternoon.

Navy Leaves To Face Irish

Squad of 44 Players Given Roaring Send-Off.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 8 (Spl.). Prepared to throw everything into the breach in the hope of continuing their unbroken string of victories for the season, the Navy's gridmen, 44 strong, left here tonight for Cleveland, where they will tackle Notre Dame in Municipal Stadium Saturday.

The players were given a roaring send-off.

A brisk formation drill marked the team's final work-out here. With Slade Cutter and Dave Zabriskie, crack tackle and guard, respectively, recovered from injuries and ready for action, the Tars were pronounced in fine fettle.

Irish Entrain.

South Bend, Ind., Nov. 8 (AP).—Notre Dame's last workout at home before leaving for Cleveland, where Navy will be met Saturday, was devoted to forward-pass defense. Coach Elmer Layden indicated the same lineup which started against Pittsburgh last week will oppose the Middies. A squad of 33 men made the trip.

5 Elevens Face Crucial Tilts Tomorrow

Each Unbeaten, to Draw Most of Nation's Fans' Interest.

THE doleful prospect of elimination from the race for top football honors faces five of America's standout varsities this week, according to the United Press.

These five teams, boasting perfect records—Navy, Tulane, Washington, Syracuse and Michigan State—are to play in the Nation's most gala contests of the week-end.

Navy meets Notre Dame. This will be the second real test for the Midshipmen. The first was Columbia, and the Navy victory in that game which had extended through the 1933 season and the Rose Bowl.

Colgate Is Favored.

Tulane's record is perfect, but includes a 7-to-6 squeak with Georgia. Colgate, although its record includes a 10-to-7 loss to Ohio State, is rated with the power and deception to take the Wave in New York's best game of the day.

Washington has come along grandly, its only close call having turned up last week when the Hus-

V. M. I. Cadets Ready For Maryland Game

Lexington, Va., Nov. 8 (AP).—Satisfied with the way V. M. I.'s attack is shaping up for the Maryland game Monday, Coach Bill Raftery kept the Cadets busy with dummy scrimmage today, working on defense against Terrapin running plays.

President's Term Runs For Year

Traband Is Named Aid; Heydler Is Elected to Post for Life.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8 (U.P.).—Ford C. Frick, once an Indiana farm boy, prepared tonight to push aside his radio mike with much the same gesture of finality he made when he left his typewriter a few months ago in his climb to the top.

From the ranks of the baseball writers, by way of radio and the publicity directorship of the National League, Frick today was moved up into the swivel chair of the older circuit's presidency. National League club owners elected him to the league presidency for a term of one year to succeed John Arnold Heydler, who resigned because of ill health.

Frick's salary as president was not disclosed. But it was understood, that since he sacrificed his income as a sports broadcaster—having been a former baseball reporter and sports writer generally—he probably was given the same salary that had been Heydler's—$30,000 a year—before Heydler voluntarily voted himself a $5,000 decrease when the depression cut into baseball profits.

Heydler was dissuaded by the club owners from severing all connection with the league he had headed since 1918, and he was elected chairman of the board, a new office, for a life term.

Traband for Secretary.

Harvey Traband, who came into the National League as Heydler's secretary in 1925, was picked for secretary and treasurer, also a new position, formerly held by Heydler along with the league presidency.

Amid the flash and clicking of news cameras in the National League offices was made the announcement of the new officers, and, coincidentlly, the first baseball manager to shake the hand of the new president was Frank Frisch. He and Frick broke into baseball at the same time as rookie player and rookie writer with the old New York Giants back in the early '20s.

In the early '30s, both reached the pinnacle—Frisch as manager of the world champion St. Louis Cardinals, and Frick as League president.

To Discontinue Bureau.

For the time being the league service bureau, which Frick headed, will be discontinued. Meanwhile, Frick will have until the end of the fiscal year, December 11, to prepare himself for his new office.

Heydler will preside at the annual December league meetings and thus conclude his business as president.

Frick will fulfill his broadcasting contracts and drop them upon expiration to devote his full time to running the league's affairs.

Frick, youngest president the league has had, was born on a farm near Wawaka, Ind., in December, 1894. He finished his education at Fepauw and migrated to Colorado Springs, where he taught English

A TRUE BLEND OF STRAIGHT

Some of the oldest whiskey in the Glenmore Warehouses is so combined in Tom Hardy as to produce a flavor seldom surpassed.

TOM HARDY is a blend of straight whiskies. Prove this by reading the back label on the Tom Hardy bottle. You will find that the front label is "the show window" and tells the story of Tom Hardy and where it is made, but the back label is "the prescription."

The back label describes the exact contents—but neither the front nor back label can begin to describe the rich, mellow flavor, the surprising value in this whiskey which is priced very low.

Kong, Hawaiian Star, Eliminates Altrock in Golf Tournament at Rock Creek

Law Student Triumphs 8 and 7

Osborne-Ficco Victors; Darkness Halts Hoag and Sharkey Match.

BEN KONG, 24-year-old Hawaiian golfer, installed himself as a real threat for the championship yesterday by eliminating Nick Altrock, defending titleholder, 8 and 7, in the first round of the Rock Creek turkey tournament.

Kong, former Honolulu champion, now studying law at George Washington University, played such rock-steady golf that Altrock failed to win a hole. Kong was 6 up at the turn, and shot the 11 holes in 3-over-par figures. Altrock managed to match Kong on the first and ninth holes. The Hawaiian star went out in 36, 2 over par, and started back 4-4.

Osborne, Ficco Advance.

Haynes Osborne and Charlie Ficco advanced to the second round. Osborne won a thriller from Leo Cullinane by 1 up in the day's only upset, while Ficco put out S. C. Wimsatt, 5 and 4.

Osborne scored a 75 against Cullinane, being 1 up at the turn, and shooting a flock of birdies on the stretch to beat off his rival's challenge.

Ficco had little trouble disposing of the veteran Wimsatt, grabbing an early lead and rounding the tenth with a 3 up advantage. Wimsatt's putter refused to behave on at least six holes, as he missed putt after putt.

Hoag in Draw.

Russell Hoag, whose 68 was only one shot from the pacesetter, Claude Rippy, in the medal round, fought to a draw with 14-year-old Buddy Sharkey. Darkness snapped their efforts on the eighteenth green. Sharkey was 1 down at the turn, and was 1 up and 1 to go, losing the home hole in almost pitch darkness to Hoag's brilliant par 4 They will resume their match Sunday strictly on an extra-hole basis.

The feature match between Rippy and Eddie Stolark failed to materialize. They will play Sunday.

Two matches were played in the fifth flight, J. A. Sauerwine winning from Marcus Choconas, 7 and 6, and R. M. Roundabush overcoming P. J. Lynch, 4 and 3.

In the women's flight, Mrs. W. M. Huber, formerly of Florida, eliminated Mrs. A. Holland, 2 and 1, and Mrs. Nick Altrock defeated Mrs. H. Abel, 4 and 3.

Tulane - Colgate Game Highly Rated

reason we call them the Hamilton Prestidigitators.

Some time the ball changes hands as many as six times, via direct secret passes, short laterals, forwards and more laterals. Every Colgate player is a consummate actor as well as a blocker, runner and tackler. The success of a play depends as much upon his ability to dissemble as to run with the ball. There is no moment quite as charming in football as that when seven big fellows hurl themselves upon a Colgate back and bring him to earth and then arise sheepishly to discover that he hasn't got the ball and never had it.

Of course, much of Coach Andy Kerr's success with this sleight-of-hand stuff depends on the solidity of his line. The backfield is fast and beautifully timed, but one tackle blundering through even without the faintest notion where the ball is can gum up a delicate play merely by being in the way. If I were defending against Kerr's attack, I would tell my ends and tackles to forget about the ball and just crash through to bump into as many backfield men as possible and let the secondary worry about the man who winds up with the ball.

Tulane Youngster.

Tulane has a 228-pound tackle named Bob Tessier who might do that, or who might on the other hand be made to look very, very foolish. The Kerr game is designed especially for the confusion of young men who weigh 200 pounds and over. But I once saw a Colgate team play behind an inferior line and against a fast charging defense, and they then looked very bad indeed. With the ball manipulators bumped out of position and interfered with, the intricate plays never could get started.

This year the Colgate line is a stalwart one and a perfect screen. Bent over double, and turned slightly away from the line of scrimmage, the Colgate backs criss-cross, feint, run back and forth, conceal even the passing of the ball to one another in a bewildering hocus pocus. Now you see it, now you don't. Or did you ever? Often the referee himself is fooled and runs to the wrong pile. The Kerr system is beautifully worked out so that no man's work is done until the ball is downed, no man is wasted. The man who has just thrown a lateral becomes a blocker. Interference may be real interference, or it may be a gang of wily thespians who suddenly spread out, fade back and toss three lateral passes in a row. Tulane won, 7-0, last year. Something tells me that Colgate is loaded for Saturday.

Michigan State Eleven Off to Meet Syracuse

East Lansing, Mich., Nov. 8 (AP).—Michigan State College's undefeated gridiron warriors, 35 strong, entrained at midnight for Syracuse to meet the unbeaten, untied Syracuse eleven Saturday. The squad will arrive in Syracuse at noon tomorrow and have a final signal drill there.

Old Line-Cadet Game Test For Stars

Seven Candidates for Conference Honors Play at College Park.

MARYLAND'S game with Virginia Military Institute in Baltimore Monday is beginning to assume the complexion of a battle of all-stars, what with seven of the combatants seeking recognition on the Southern Conference honor roll.

V. M. I.'s nominees are Capt. Jack Zimmerman, center; Johnny Burgess, guard, and Meredith Urick, full back. Maryland's candidates are "South" Sothoron, Bill Guckeyson, quarter and half back, respectively; Ed. Minion, guard, and Lou Ennis, end man.

Cadets Have Veterans.

All of the Cadets are three-year men rounding out their college football careers and all of them are comparatively light. Burgess, the biggest, weighs only 180-pounds, Zimmerman hits 176 and Urick 177.

It was the work of this trio that enabled V. M. I. to ring up its first victory of the season last week at William and Mary's expense. They lack weight, but they have a surplus of grit and spirit.

Of the Maryland candidates, Sothoron and Guckeyson are new to this business of striving for sectional honors, since neither was with the varsity last season. With Ennis and Minion, however, it is different. Both were All-State selections for their respective positions last year.

Ennis' Chances Bright.

Ennis' chances of winning a conberence berth are particularly bright. He has played a good game on every appearance this season—outstripping opposing ends who faced him. An expert pass receiver, the lad's best work is on the defense. It is his boast that no back has gained around his end this season.

Virginia Military Institute will taper off tomorrow after a week of strenuous drilling and will arrive at College Park Sunday. Both teams will proceed to Baltimore Monday morning. Arrangements have been made to admit all school children from any part of the State to the game free of charge.

Alcova to Play Pirates.

The Alcova Athletic Club grid team will play the Alexandria Pirates on the Arlington Field Sunday at 2:30 p. m. The Alcova team, which is undefeated this season and boasts of a win over the Congress Heights Athletic Club, who has won 25 straight games, are booking games at Clarendon 1490.

Hall's Setter Wins Honors In Stake

Faygate March Captures Silver Bowl in Event Near Round Hill.

ROUND HILL, Va., Nov. 9 (Spl.).—Finding birds and handling them exceptionally well, a splendid Llewellyn setter, belonging to B. E. B. Hall, of Middleburg, took highest honors on the closing day of the shooting dog stake run today on the J. D. Thomas Farm, near here.

Hall's Faygate Marsh, 3-year-old, scored a sparkling triumph this morning to capture the handsome challenge silver bowl, which must be won three times for permanent possession.

The Middleburg dog's well-earned victory, achieved at the expense of 36 contestants, climaxed the first annual field trials sponsored by the Loudoun Gun Dog Club. Second place went to Bullock's Faygate Puck, 2-year-old, also owned by B. E. B. Hall.

Excellent work was done by the dogs, all Loudoun County entries, in the two days running of the stake.

Alexandria's Gridmen Face Hopewell

Ewald and Nugent Injured; Initial Basket Ball Practice Held.

Several minor injuries were suffered in yesterday's scrimmage and Coach Givens decided not to take any further chances. Dutch Ewald, varsity quarter back, and Nappy Nugent, alternate end and back, are out with sprained ankles.

The first basket ball practice of the season was held by Alexandria High in Armory Hall this afternoon. Most of the drill was devoted to limbering up exercises and other light work.

The newly organized Virginia A. C. will go to Lorton Sunday to open its delayed football season. Coach Mike Goldman has been drilling his boys hard for the last two weeks.

The Pirate A. C. will drill tonight in preparation for Sunday's engagement with the Alcova Motor Co. eleven. Hal Bobian, former four-letterman at Massena High School in New York State, has been signed by Manager Edgar Wood, and will perform Sunday.

The Baltimore Irvingtons, Maryland State semipro champions, will invade Baggett's Stadium Sunday to engage the Alexandria Fraters.

The game will mark the reopening of activities between the Irvingtons and Alexandria teams. When the Alexandria Celtics were in the field their invasion of the Irvingtons' stronghold was an annual affair.

Cards Stop Leading Scorer; Must Now Oppose Successor

LIFE for Catholic U.'s gridmen seems to be meeting one leading scorer after another and trying to stop them.

Last week the Redbirds met and stopped Bill Shepherd, Western Maryland's nominee for All-American honors, who up until that game topped the national scoring list. The Marylander failed to score, though the Terrors won the ball on a safety.

Shepherd lost his rank, but that afforded the Cards little or no consolation since he lost it to Art Strutt, Duquesne full back, whom Coach Art Bergman's men will meet personally two weeks from Saturday.

Strutt's goal-line strutting has netted 13 touchdowns, or 78 points, in actual figures, while Shepherd has 9 touchdowns, 11 points after and 2 field goals for 71 points.

Strutt hails from Mingo Junction, Ohio. He's an inch shy of 6 feet, wiry and agile, weighs 178 pounds. With George Rado he co-captains the Dukes. Strutt is strong on amateur theatrical work, and also is a radio entertainer. His ball-carrying has gained an average of 6½ yards.

Strutt also is a shortstop and has an agreement with the Pittsburgh Pirates, who are expected to sign him next season.

Pro Net Offer Rejected by Stoefen

12½ Per Cent Is Refused; Asks 20 Instead, to Join Tilden Group.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8 (AP).—The plans of Sports Promoter Bill O'Brien to include the American Davis Cup doubles team of George M. Lott, jr., and Lester R. Stoefen in his winter tour of professional tennis players went 50 per cent askew today when Stoefen rejected an offer of 12½ per cent of the gate receipts to quit amateur ranks.

Lott, generally recognized as the world's foremost doubles performer, last week signed a contract identical to the one Stoffen turned down.

Stoefen returned O'Brien's contract unsigned, and, instead, sent one to O'Brien specifying 20 per cent of the gross gate receipts.

"His price is entirely too high and more than he is worth," O'Brien said, "I have returned the original contract to Stoefen and sent him a telegram that he has until next Tuesday to sign."

In the event Stoefen doesn't come to terms, O'Brien will cast a line for some other amateur to team up with Vines, Bill Tilden and Lott. The player most likely to be sought will be Bryan (Bitsey) Grant, the little Atlantan.

Grant Says He's Open To All Pro Offers

Atlanta, Nov. 8 (AP).—Bryan M. (Bitsy) Grant, Atlanta amateur, said today he was "open to all offers" relative to entering professional tennis.

"I am open to all offers, but so far I've heard nothing," he said. "I will entertain any offer made me. Of course, I'm in the insurance business now, and they'd have to go pretty high for me to accept."

Alexandrians Win Two Games

Episcopal High School Has Big Day on Grid.

ALEXANDRIA, Nov. 8 (Spl.).—Two Episcopal High School football teams triumphed yesterday. The "Little Varsity" defeated Washington and Lee High Reserves, 7 to 0, and the 120-pound team won from McDonogh School, of Baltimore, 14 to 13.

Goodwin scored Episcopal's lone touchdown in the first quarter against Washington and Lee, while with 40 seconds remaining Dorsey, of Episcopal, plunged over from the 5-yard line for the tying touchdown against McDonogh School.

District Boy Is Star On Fishburne Team

Fishburne Military School's success on the gridiron this fall is largely responsible to the hard tackling and excellent blocking of Warren Taylor, son of Mrs. Mabel L. Gipson, 619 G street southwest.

The Garnet and Gold has won two games, tied one and lost one so far this season and in every game Taylor has been outstanding. He is a former Central High and Bullis Prep athlete.

Zuppke Pays 'Old Debt' to Illinois

Puts Out Great Team in Return for Confidence During Lean Years.

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., Nov. 8 (AP).—Here at the University of Illinois, where there aren't any drug-store coaches and where they take the bitter with the sweet, Bob Zuppke is repaying confidence in his ability as a coach with big dividends this year.

His head buzzing with more incredible schemes and tricks than ever before the little Dutchman is hauling the Illini back to the football peak with the very force of his genius in his twenty-second season as commander of the Orange and Blue. His team of today, undefeated and untied, is one of his greatest coaching masterpieces.

Received No Criticism.

During the bleak years of 1930, '31 and '32, when the Illini absorbed some of their most frightful lickings in history, not one word was raised in criticism of the little Dutchman in direct contrast to other universities and colleges, where a series of defeats prompted the wolves to howl for the scalps of the unfortunate coaches. Illinois had faith in the man they drafted direct from the high school coaching ranks. And today the Illini faith is being rewarded.

Although not a great team physically, the Illini probably have played more brilliant football per pound than any college team today. A 60-minute team handling Zuppke's intricate formations almost faultlessly, Illinois has swept five teams before its rush—Bradley, Washington University of St. Louis, Ohio State, Michigan and the Army, reversing one-point decisions that spoiled Big Ten championship hopes a year ago against Ohio State and Michigan. Last week's victory over the hitherto undefeated Army in the mud was the finest performance of them all.

Concocts Great Play.

Zuppke, an oldtimer with new ideas, gave football another twister this season with his "flying trapeze" play, which beat back Ohio State's powerhouse, 14 to 13. Many critics rate the play one of the greatest ever arranged by Zuppke. Even today, no one but Zuppke and his alert backs know exactly how the play goes, but it is an admixture of passes handled by five men. Against Ohio State, it worked from center to Frank Froschauer, laterally to Les Lindberg, laterally to Jack Beynon, who finished it by throwing a long diagonal pass to Gene Dykstra.

Zuppke, who has won a rank among the great coaches of the game, now is even or ahead of every one of his gridiron opponents during his long regime with the exception of Michigan, which has beaten his teams 9 out of 15 times. By defeating the Army Saturday, he squared that series at 2-all, bringing his grand batting average for all games at Illinois to .706. His record is 174 victories against 87 defeats and 8 ties. If his team goes through undefeated this year, it will be his eighth Big Ten championship machine. Five of those championships were undisputed.

Unbeaten Elevens Face Crucial Tilts

kies just did score in time to top Oregon State, 14-7. This week Washington pairs up with Stanford and many on the Far Coast insist the Huskies haven't a chance.

Syracuse and Michigan State meet in the only game Saturday involving two major undefeated and untied teams. Because of the higher quality of opposition, State's record seems brighter. But Syracuse is a big powerhouse—one of the heaviest teams in the country.

Georgia Plays Yale.

Georgia, with no great shakes of a record, takes on Yale in their annual affair, with most opinion favoring New Haven. Temple stacks up a couple of notches over Carnegie Tech in the other close Eastern game of the day. Most of the other seaboard events seem too one-sided for serious consideration. Everybody expects Army to wallop Harvard, Fordham to take West Virginia despite the pointing the Mountaineers have done for the Rams. Holy Cross figures to trim Manhattan, Dartmouth to beat New Hampshire, and Princeton to trounce Lehigh.

Best expert opinion in the Midwest calls for a determined but ineffective stand by Indiana against the great Minnesota team, and for Northwestern to push Illinois to the limit. Michigan is picked over Wisconsin, Purdue over Iowa, Ohio State over Chicago.

Southwest Contests.

The Southwest offers some corkers. Southern Methodist's smart squad is liked over Texas Aggies, Texas over Baylor, Rice over Arkansas.

Los Angeles and San Francisco selectors pick Southern California over California, Washington State over Idaho, Oregon over Oregon State, St. Mary's over U. C. L. A. The St. Mary's U. C. L. A. game will be played Monday.

Its an off-week in the South, with Auburn is rated over Georgia Tech, Alabama over Clemson, Florida over Mississippi, Louisiana State over George Washington. Rocky Mountain sharp-shooters list Denver over Drake, Utah over Colorado, Utah Aggies over Colorado Aggies.

No Franchise Changes.

Des Moines, Nov. 8 (AP).—After a stormy four-hour business session, representatives of the Western League baseball clubs announced tonight there would be no franchise changes for the 1935 season.

Prescott Bush Named Head Of U.S.G.A.

Succeeds Herbert Jaques; Frank Hardt Picked for Secretary.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8 (AP).—Prescott S. Bush, New York banker and a former secretary and vice president, today was nominated for the presidency of the United States Golf Association for 1935. Election at the annual meeting in January heretofore always has followed nomination.

He succeeds Herbert Jaques, of Boston, who held the office for two years.

Nominated with Bush are: Vice presidents, John G. Jackson and Archie M. Reid, both of New York; secretary, Frank M. Hardt, Philadelphia; treasurer, Harold W. Pierce, Boston; counsel, Morton G. Bogue, New York.

Was Born in Ohio.

The U. S. G. A. president-nominee was born in Columbus, Ohio, in 1895 and after graduating from Yale, where he won his letter in baseball and was a member of the golf team, he returned to Ohio to go to the semifinals and then the finals of the Ohio State golf championship.

Bush was secretary of the U. S. G. A., 1928-32, and a vice president, 1933-34.

All the other officers, except Hardt, were officers last year and with the exception of Reid, were renominated for their present posts.

Long Challenges Minnesota Team

gay white way would be a lark. Yep," the Senator replied to the question, "yep, I'll bring my soundtruck and sing you a few real Southern songs, too! Football is a game—not a big business."

Meanwhile, James Broussard, chairman of the athletic council at Baton Rouge, said he would confer with the president of the university to frame a communication to Minnesota.

Swamped with Challenges.

The Kingfish was swamped by challenges, he said. One came from Colgate. "Am being annoyed," Huey answered, "by these boll weevil football claimants springing up over the country. If you will stay out of the way, we will have the situation settled soon. Please don't disturb.—Signed Huey P. Long."

Tim Mara, of the New York Giants professional team, wired: "We will play your Louisiana State eleven in the Polo Grounds, turn over to you all the receipts if you win and one-half if you lose." Huey ignored this one.

"Tell Mayor LaGuardia we will play only for his charity in New York," said the Senator, "and we will play the only legitimate contender the North has which is Minnesota. All the others are push-overs."

10,000 See Adobe Post Win 'Gansett Feature

Narragansett Park, R. I., Nov. 8 (AP).—This racing strip's second charity day of the week drew a crowd of 10,000 today.

Adobe Post ran a front race to capture the feature event from Englewood, and the steady Butter Beans showed. Her Gold, the popular choice, never threatened but most of the favorites had better fortune in other races.

Bill Shepherd Rated Above Borries

Tuffy Leemans Called Best All-Around Man to Perform Here.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

THREE visiting candidates for the exalted office of All-America, or even part of it, and a few of the home-grown variety have been paraded before us, properly and improperly ballyhooed by their respective press agents and have played a lot of good football. But only one of these will be considered when the powers that decide such matters settle down to voting.

Possibly you've guessed the name. Buzz Borries, the Navy's human projectile, who appears to have scored a bullseye with the All-American official family. Now the Buzzer is a good back, make no mistake about that, but we believe that Bill Shepherd, of Western Maryland, is better, although the Terror ace is likely to be in the consolation flight when all returns are in.

Of Undisputed Hue.

Shepherd and Western Maryland and Shepherd and Navy are two vastly different combinations. Rig out Shepherd in a Middie uniform, give him the Navy's Nation-wide ballyhoo and put him in Yankee Stadium, Franklin Field or the Polo Grounds against teams the sports writers like to talk and scribble about, and you'd have an All-American of undisputed hue.

Shepherd hits a line like an enraged bull. He doesn't stop when hit, but keeps driving and slides off into and through the most convenient hole. His knees almost uppercut the chin. You've got to hit him hard and cleanly or they'll be dragging you off the field—cold.

Broken Field Artist.

Borries is fast, elusive, and alert for opportunities, but send him into a mass of arms, legs, elbows in the ribs and football paraphernalia and if the hole fails to open up, he stops. In a broken field he's harder to catch than Shepherd. He bounces from one tackler to another, feints, dodges, spins and employs all the artifices of escape in admirable fashion.

Borries can not pass with Shepherd, who, in our book, rates as one of the East's finest wingers—bar none. He can't kick with Shepherd, who is good, but not outstanding. Shepherd also can block, take out the tackle, and hit the secondary with more efficacy than his Middie rival. Borries does all of these things, but not as well as Shepherd.

Best All-Around Man.

Tuffy Leemans, of the local crop of ball toters, is the best all-around man, but he doesn't rate with either Shepherd or Borries. Leemans would go well in any back field, particularly one where the other lads helped out a bit. Tuffy's been carrying the burden alone all season and it weighs heavily upon him.

Other backs on local campuses who catch the eye are Chubby Parcells, Georgetown, for returning punts, and Joe Meglen, of the same school, for kicking them in a tight situation. Meglen must have competition, and plenty of it, to shine.

Gene Augusterfer, Catholic U., is the best blocking back, and has been for two years. Leemans is the best passer and Parcels the best pass receiver.

Many at Maryland.

We hesitate to single out any Maryland backs, what with Sothoron, Guckeyson, Headley and a flock of others taking the play away from Earl Widmyer. Earl was boomed as all-American timber before the campaign opened, but Faber's sophomores have shoved him almost out of America.

Yet Al Secino, Tom Oliver, the Gearty boys and some of those C. U. backs can and do shove the Terps all over the lot in practice.

McCadon Cancels Dominguez Fight

Prefers to Meet Winner of Wilson-Furr Bout.

The Tony Dominguez - Jay McCadon bout, which was to have headed the regular boxing program at the Riding and Hunt Club next Monday night, was canceled yesterday.

McCadon, conqueror of Bob Wilson, did not desire to risk his prestige against the rugged Cuban, but preferred to wait to meet the winner of a Wilson - Phil Furr contest scheduled for November 19.

An all-star card, similar to last week's artistic and financial flop, will be arranged for Monday night.

WINTER AHEAD

Cold weather means a harder starting motor, resulting in more work for your battery. Is it in condition to take on this extra burden? Let us examine it—tell you its exact condition.

Annapolis Repeats His Victory of Last Year in Hunters' Steeplechase at Pimlico

Veteran Star Ridden by Bassett

What Have You Second After Setting Pace in 3-Mile Contest.

By Walter Haight,
Post Staff Writer.

PIMLICO RACE TRACK, Nov. 8. Amateur riders had their innings at this race track today, with the Master of Foxhounds Steeplechase occupying the feature spot on a well-balanced program. C. K. Bassett and Annapolis, a combination respected around the hunting circuit, repeated their performance of a year ago when they outclassed a field of six registered hunters and as many gentlemen jockeys over the gruelling 3-mile course. Annapolis, the property of the popular Mrs. T. H. Somerville, of Montpelier, in ole Virginny, could not have been better ridden had he had a perfect mechanical jockey in the saddle.

The aged son of Man o' War, which took to jumping for a living after a successful career in the, stake class on the flat, led Frank M. Gould's What Have You to the wire by two lengths and a half, with A. Utermyer's Bagatelle third and ten lengths away. Devoid of accidents, the race was beautiful to see and each of the gentlemen riders finished the course.

Sets Swift Pace.

C. R. White made a game attempt to steal the race with What Have You. The Gould-owned jumper, although he carried top weight, went to the front soon after the start and set a swift pace. From a slow beginning, Bassett brought Annapolis into a contending position after the first swing of the course. Going to the sixteenth brush, What Have You retained the lead, but it was evident that Bassett was holding a lot of speed in his grip on Annapolis. At this fence What Have You made a bad landing. That was Bassett's cue and he made the most of his opportunity, rushing Annapolis to the front.

The race was over at this point, for Annapolis drew out into a long lead and the completion of the distance was a mere formality. Bassett glanced back at the now tiring What Have You and was pulling up on Annapolis from the last jump to the finish line.

Bagatelle Is Third.

Bagatelle, under the handling of R. G. Wolfe, showed little speed for two turns of the course, but finished courageously to take the third money from Drapeau, a stablemate, by a length.

There was the usual vulgar betting on the race and the regulars knew their Annapolis. They installed him an odds-on favorite and then repaired to the various pay-off stations to collect $3.80 for each $2 investment.

The Pimlico management, which specializes in economy, was forced to burn a lot of electricity at the conclusion of the fifth race. Little Silvio Coucci rode Galy Arrow to victory and a display of $109.60, $48.30 and $23.90 resulted. Galy Arrow won by only a head, but that was enough for the long-shot players.

Memorable Is Victor.

Memorable, owned by Frank Hayes, the Mayor of Waterbury, Conn., ran his way out of the maiden class in the first race under the skillful handling of the colored boy, C. Reid. Except for a brief interval following the start, Memorable was in front and disposed of Bull Market by a length. Rock Spray, which ran with the winner for 3 furlongs, was third. Memorable, after opening the favorite, finally paid a $7 mutuel.

The second race reminded of the old "Drug Store Handicap," which used to designate a field in which most of the horses were widly stimulated. For almost ten minutes, Starter Milton sought an alignment. It was not until Mouthpiece, with a twitch in his nose, and Canmas were put outside of the stall gates, that the field was sent away. Mouthpiece, perhaps the worst of the actors, proved best in the race. The son of Coventry led Idle Flirt to the finish line by a length. Another length and a half away came Mary's May with the favorite, Triolet, fourth after a rough trip.

in Colorado College and did his first newspaper work.

He advanced thence to sports writing ni Denver. Arthur Brisbane brought him to the New York American in 1922 and he spent the rest of his newspaper career there and with the New York Journal, chiefly writing baseball.

Traband, 46, was born at Hudson, N. Y. Before becoming Heydler's secretary in 1925 he was by turns a stenographer, a clerk, a salesman and secretary to Alfred P. Sloan, automobile manufacturer, and secretary of the AAA Contest Board.

Manager Resigns.

Des Moines, Nov. 8 (AP).—Officials of the Davenport Western League baseball team announced here today at the annual meeting of the circuit that Cletus Dixon, manager of the Blue Sox, had resigned.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MEMORABLE, $7.00, $4.70, $2.80; BULL MARKET, $5.10, $2.80; ROCK SPRAY, $2.40.

MEMORABLE, away fast, rushed into lead, saved ground all the way and held on gamely. BULL MARKET moved up with a rush turning out of back stretch, but failed to get to the winner. ROCK SPRAY was hard ridden from the start, but weakened at end. ITALIAN HARRY broke slow and made up a lot of ground. HAPPY TOM stopped badly in stretch.

SECOND RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $800; claiming. The Severn. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start poor. Won easily; place, same. Went to post at 2:00. Off at 2:09½. Winner, S. J. Brown's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MOUTHPIECE, $9.00, $5.20, $3.00; IDLE FLIRST, $14.50, $9.10; MARYS MAY, $7.50.

MOUTHPIECE, mean at the gate. He refused to line up, was taken back and broke running, followed pace closely to stretch, took lead and won nicely in hand. IDLE FLIRT moved up with a rush and was next best. MARYS MAY closed ground very fast. TRIOLET was taken the overland route and finished gamely. REPEAL stopped badly. ALCODEMA had speed for six furlongs, then tired.

THIRD RACE—Three miles (over brush course). Purse, $1,000. The Master of Hounds Steeplechase, for hunters holding certificates from the National Steeplechase and Hunt Association. Start good. Won easily; place, same. Went to post at 2:35. Off at 2:37. Winner, Mrs. T. H. Somerville's br. h. (a), by Man O'War—Panoply. Trained by S. L. Burch. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 6:07 4-5.

†Alvin Untermyer entry.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ANNAPOLIS, $3.80, $2.70, $2.40; WHAT HAVE YOU, $3.40, $2.50; BAGATELLE, $2.40.

ANNAPOLIS, a very good jumper. He was rated behind pace for two and a half miles, then shot into lead, drew away and won only galloping at end. WHAT HAVE YOU handled his weight well, made the pace for three turns of the field and held on well. BAGATELLE moved up gradually and came along after clearing last fence to easily take the show. DRAPEAU, well up from the start, tired in last half-mile. The others were never dangerous.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800. The Interrogative. For 2-year-olds, nonwinners of more than two races. Start bad. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:06. Off at 3:11½. Winner, Mrs. John D. Hertz's br. c. (2), by Reigh Count—Anita Peabody. Trained by F. A. Hackett. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:12 3-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—OUR REIGH, $4.60, $3.80, $3.20; OFFICIAL, $13.80, $6.80; BOSTON BROOK, $5.00.

OUR REIGH in good form. He had plenty of speed, took lead in stretch and won drawing away. OFFICIAL was sent to the front with a rush, set fast pace and held on well. BOSTON BROOK well up from the start. DIRECT HIT ran a good race under poor handling. CRISTATE, DIVERTING, STAVKA and UNCLE BILLY had no chance with the start.

FIFTH RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:37. Off at 3:45. Winner, W. Duran's b. c. (3), by Sir Gallahad 3d—Flower of Yarrow. Trained by John Boxley, jr. Value to winner, $600; second, $125; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:46 2-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GALYARROW, $109.60, $48.30, $23.90; SCOTCH SOLDIER, $10.10, $5.70; SMOOTH CROSSING, $3.70.

GALYARROW, showing vast improvement over recent races, was sent to the front in run down back stretch, stood long drive gamely. SCOTCH SOLDIER broke well in motion, was taken wide all the way, closed gamely and ran good race. SMOOTH CROSSING had a very roush trip. OUTBOUND went wide all the way. LUCK IN stopped badly.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. The Wewajuope. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place, same. Went to post at 4:11. Off at 4:12½. Winner, Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's ch. g. (3), by Trojan—Blazing Ember. Trained by J. H. Stotler. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:12.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—DREEL, $4.50, $3.30, $2.60; CAN'T REMEMBER, $6.40, $4.50; BAND WAGON, $2.70.

DREEL much the best. He broke a bit slow, but went up with a rush on outside, assumed lead in stretch and won nicely in end. CAN'T REMEMBER got away flying, showed early speed, saved ground and held on gamely. BAND WAGON made his bid around turn, but weakened fast in final furlong. STROLL ALONG, outrun in early part, closed fast. LUXOR ran a fair race. POSTSCRIPT was outrun.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, driving. Went to post at 4:37. Off at 4:38. Winner, N. E. Stanton's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WISE ADVOCATE, $8.50, $3.80, $3.10; INFINITATE, $3.80, $2.90; MR. BUN, $5.00.

WISE ADVOCATE, far back for the first six furlongs, gained fast in the last half-mile, then came around the leaders to get up in the last sixteenth. INFINITATE held to a brief lead while in stiff contention from MR. BUN, responded to punishment and then held on courageously. MR. BUN had a lot taken out of him when rushed around his field at the first turn to join the pacemaker and he weakened during the closing furlong. PRINCE ABBOT went closer up than usual. He was badly blocked all during the closing furlong when kept in behind the leaders. RED JUG could not better his position. PASS SHOT could not enter contention. BAKERS DOZEN quit.

EIGHTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:08. Off at 5:08½. Winner, Ascot Stable's ch. g. Horses Take to the Ring at the Madison Square Garden

Madison Square Garden, the great temple of wallop, is the scene of another kind of ring sport as horses take to the show ring in the opening night's performance of the National Horse Show. Entries in class two, limit harness competition, are shown being judged. Captivation, exhibited by Loula Long Combs, of Lee's Summit, Mo., won first prize.

At the Post . . .

Dear Al: Pimlico Race Track, Nov. 8.

Although you may hear little about it because Saturday's Riggs Handicap would lose crowd lure, Equipoise may not start in the $7,500 week-end feature. The Whitney racer is in splendid shape, but Trainer Tom Healey is doing a lot of thinking before sending his star to the post. The horse is being pointed for the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap this winter and it is thought that the Riggs, coming so close to the Whitney Trophy, in which "Ekky" ran a hard race, might bring a recurrence of his old leg injury. Should Equipoise win the Santa Anita, he will have topped Sun Beau's all-time money mark of $376,744 and that's the only reason Owner Whitney allows the horse to be kept in training. With Don Meade's accident putting him on the shelf, Wayne Wright, his rival, failed to win a race. One of Jockey Silvo Coucci's dear friends bet on Luck In in the same race that the young Italian boy rode Galyarrow home at a $109.60 mutuel. Lipstick wouldn't make a mark on the friend's face after the race. "Last Rundown," whose notes prove I have a public, writes in to say: "Fining Meade $10 yesterday was like giving Dillinger a parking ticket. BILL.

First race—The day's steeplechase offers a puzzle. Leapers which have been beating one another clash. I prefer them in this order: Redshank, Teakwood and Blackcock. Luckite might be dangerous if allowed to run but he is too far down the list to warrant consideration.

Second race—Jim John is a pretty lively juvenile and has barely missed leaving the maiden ranks on several occasions. Meets a field here that seems to suit him. Headin Home and Miss Alphonson to take care of the others.

Third race—Gay Knightess has been getting education and the Western filly seems ready to score her first win. Breaks from the rail and, with Kacala to do the riding, I'm stringing along. Verbena is a possible surprise.

Fourth race — Jabot, provided Jockey Robertson can keep him out of trouble going to the first turn, would be a hard horse to beat. Knights Gal is the same dependable racer she was earlier in the season. Greyglade hasn't made a move in months but he is in the entries regularly. Look for a wake-up soon.

Fifth Race—This is the spot I have been awaiting. Get the winter coal money on Brindle. This fellow doesn't start running until he reaches the half pole. Asked to go a route tomorrow and I expect an upset.

Sixth Race—High Glee shapes up best in this test. Okapi failed me in a sprint the other day. That fine Narragansett race might have taken something out of the Brookmeade star. Chatmoss for the show end.

Seventh Race—Happy Go is the speed of this party and the race looks like one of those catch-me-if-you-can affairs. The Audley Farms entry of Carbina and Gallant Mac and Enthusiasm appear better than the others.

Eighth Race—Stone Martin served warning in that last outing that his old legs are in shape. Dangerous tomorrow. Volta Maid and Xandra for the place and show.

Narragansett Results.

Midnight Tonight Is Deadline For Entries in Post Contest

FRIDAY afternoon quarter backs who have been holding in abeyance their entries in this week's Postilion football contest to absorb all the "expert" advice possible, must face the issue squarely today. The deadline is midnight tonight and entries not postmarked or in The Post's offices by then automatically will become null and void.

So, all who wish to participate must make up their minds about Navy-Notre Dame, Michigan State-Syracuse, Stanford-Washington and the other nut-crackers that must be predicted this week.

The person calling the turn correctly in the greatest number of the 25 games selected below by Shirley L. Povich, sports editor of The Post, will receive as a reward four choice seats to the Navy-Pitt game at Annapolis a week from tomorrow.

The second best predicter will be given three tickets to the same game. Those finishing third, fourth, fifth and sixth in the contest each will be given two tickets.

The chart below is for your convenience, but it is not necessary to use The Post blank to file entry. In case of a tie, the winner will be determined by priority of receipt.

Tomorrow night Harris B. Hull, the Postilion broadcaster, will include scores of the games on his regular broadcast over Station WMAL.

Stocks Shrink Fraction Under Lighter Buying

Traders Refuse to Expand Orders; Sales Total 843,310 Shares.

New York, Nov. 8 (AP).—Post-election demand for stocks slackened today and the market sold off a trifle after a four-day advance.

Although many brokers and security analysts expressed their belief in inflationary tendencies, traders were in no rush to expand their holdings of shares and commodities.

The upturn in the preceding session tempted profit-taking. As stocks eased after the opening, trading quieted and the turnover dwindled to 843,310 shares, compared with 1,111,090 yesterday.

Commodities Retreat Also.

Commodities retreated with stocks, causing traders to mix a liberal amount of skepticism with the inflationary sentiment engendered by prophecies the Democratic election sweep meant more heavy Government spending.

Foreign exchange diverted attention from security markets in view of the French political crisis. The franc, however, firmed, indicating the market had anticipated developments, although it remained at levels permitting gold exports from Paris.

Minor losses outweighed gains in the share list and the Standard Statistics Co. average for 90 stocks declined six-tenths of a point, to 72.4.

Building and Motors.

Building and motor shares held well. Eastman Kodak touched a new peak above 109, finishing fractionally higher. McCrory Stores preferred, E. G. Budd, Celotex and American La France shares reacted for losses of fractions to 5 points in thin markets following sharp advances. U. S. Smelting lost 2½ as enthusiasm for so-called inflation stocks cooled.

Trade news gave no indication that the recent modest seasonal expansion in business had run its course. Electric power output last week was 5.4 per cent ahead of the like 1933 week, compared with a gain of 3.4 the preceding week. It was the best comparison with last year since spring.

The Iron Age said the way had been cleared for further improvement in iron and steel demand and forecast a "steady and perhaps accelerating upward trend" in the industry the rest of the year. It estimated current output at 26½ per cent of capacity, a gain of one-half of 1 percentage point.

Abingdon Tobacco Sales Start Dec. 1

Abingdon, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—Abingdon's burley tobacco warehouses, the Bernard-Vann, Virginian, Farmers' and Neal, Dixon and Bane, will open on or about December 1.

The warehouses, the volume of whose sales last year established Abingdon as one of the leading tobacco warehouses of the South, were originally scheduled to open about November 15, and the postponement is attributed to the inability of the "big buyers" to attend the sales earlier than the first of next month. The majority of the buyers at present are attending sales on the North Carolina markets.

Because of the Government's crop reduction program, this year's tobacco yield in Washington County will be considerably less than that of last year, but the quality of the weed will be much better, in the opinion of B. M. "Pat" Arrington, country agricultural agent, and the farmers as a whole should be well repaid for their efforts. Hundreds of thousands of pounds of burley tobacco were sold on the Abingdon warehouse floors last season, averaging better than 11 cents, the market taking its place as one of the outstanding of the entire South.

Canadian Authorities Again Resort to Intervention in Wheat Market to Keep Up Prices in Interest of Dominion Farmers.

New York, Nov. 8.—Canadian authorities are again resorting to intervention in the wheat market in what has become almost a perennial attempt to keep up prices that Dominion farmers get for their grain. Minimum quotations of 75 cents a bushel for December contracts and 80 cents a bushel for May have been fixed on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, as an interim measure pending imposition of more permanent new restriction on trading.

To understand Canada's resort to so drastic a move as price fixing on her leading grain exchange, one must keep in mind the world wheat situation at the present time. Despite a smaller crop during the past year, Canada will have available for export during the current crop year some 350,000,000 bushels of wheat over and above her domestic requirements. The Dominion authorities estimate world import demand at about 600,000,000 bushels, and they feel that about 280,000,000 bushels of Canadian grain will be purchased by other countries, regardless of price, by next June.

At this time of the year, however, the wheat crops of the southern hemisphere, including Argentina and Australia, are being harvested. During the first three months of the crop year, Argentine exports aggregated 50,000,000 bushels, and since storage facilities are notably inadequate in that country, the new crop being harvested and marketed will be pressed for sale during the near future. Hedge sales by Argentine exporters are blamed in Canada for recent weakness in the Winnipeg futures market, and were probably the immediate cause for the Winnipeg price-fixing edict.

With an exportable surplus perhaps twice as large as any other country, the price at which Canada will sell her grain will influence world wheat prices during the coming year more than any other single factor. Previously, smaller crops because of drought in the Northern Hemisphere was expected to permit the successful marketing of the Canadian crop without additional restrictions, such as can be imposed under sweeping emergency legislation enacted by the Dominion Parliament. When Canadian prices dropped last month, however, under pressure from Argentine hedge sales and offerings from other sources, the government intervened decisively. Not only were the December and May contracts pegged, but the government has let it be known also that it will purchase contracts from bona-fide sellers seeking to hedge export sales of grain and flour. Thus, through its own buying of such future contracts, the government is lending direct support to the wheat market.

Price fixing in Canada is a forcible reminder that the world still has a wheat surplus problem on its hands. This problem will become greatly intensified with a return to normal crop yields, especially since the world wheat agreement faces a prospective breakdown. None of the parties to that agreement, which has been in effect more than a year, has effected the acreage reduction they promised to attempt.

The wheat advisory committee set up by the agreement has been meeting at intervals through the summer, but no export quotas have yet been set for the current crop year. The committee will meet again in Budapest on November 20, and once again trouble is expected from the Argentine, which is held unlikely to accept the expected proffer of an export quota of 150,000,000 bushels for the full crop year ended June 30, 1935.

Serious Doubts May Be Raised On Utility of Canadian Plan.

From a long-range viewpoint, serious doubts may be raised as to whether methods such as those being used by the Canadian government and the wheat advisory committee are calculated to effect a permanent solution of the world wheat problem. Too largely, the motives are political rather than economic. They make for a system in which wheat production is subsidized, directly or indirectly, in those parts of the world where costs are high, while low-cost producers are paid or otherwise induced to curtail output. At the same time, a number of wheat-importing countries take measures to discourage consumption of wheat to reduce their purchases abroad. All in all, this policy is compelling great masses of consumers in many countries to pay high prices for poor bread, a procedure which, in the long run, is hardly likely to be tolerated.

But this concerns the ultimate future. The wheat-exporting countries meanwhile face urgent, immediate problems, and they feel bound to resort to temporary palliatives to gain relief. There is as yet not the slightest indication of any abatement of extreme economic nationalism in Europe, which is chiefly responsible for import restrictions and stimulation of consumption of wheat substitutes. Furthermore, readjustments would be essential in exporting countries even if importing nations welcomed wheat from without their borders, so largely was production expanded in the past two decades, and so convincing is the world-wide tendency toward reduced wheat consumption in the postwar years, even apart from government interference.

Pending the time when a major surgical operation is possible, it remains to be seen whether importing and exporting nations can show sufficient cooperation and self-control to effect a temporary better balance of demand and supply through the world agreement affecting exports and acreage.

Bonds Record Fractional Gain In Quiet Sales

Market Is Fairly Steady; Trading Volume Cut to $11,379,000.

New York, Nov. 8 (AP).—The bond market was quiet and fairly steady today, although the majority of listed issues were unable to get out of a fractional range.

Transfers totaled $11,379,000, par value, against $12,721,000 in the previous session.

Buyers Less Active.

Those traders and investors who yesterday interpreted the election returns as indicating an inflation-minded Congress had not altered their views to any great extent, but they were apparently not inclined to expand commitments unduly in the lower-priced bonds which might benefit by further steps toward currency expansion.

The fall of the Doumergue cabinet was not unexpected in banking quarters and the French situation was being watched closely for signs that, due partly to the current crisis, steps may be taken to shelve the gold standard.

Aside from a sharp break in Polish obligations, the foreign department did not appear to be particularly disturbed by the French political upheaval. Polish Republic 7s dropped 7 points to 118 and the 8s were off 1¾ at 85½. French bonds were dull and only slightly lower. Austrian 7s advanced 6⅜ points to 80, and issues of Argentina, Chile, Japan and Denmark were up 1 to 2 points or so.

Corporation Loans Higher.

Most prime corporation loans were slightly higher. A few outstanding gainers included Alleghany 5s, up 1 at 65; Chicago & North Western 6½s, up 2 at 76; Hudson & Manhattan refunding 5s, up 1 at 86; Louisville Gas 5s, up 1¼ at 107¼; Northern Pacific 6s, up ½ at 97½; Pacific Coast 5s, up 2¼ at 36, and Iron Mountain 4s, up 2 at 62.

Kelly-Springfield 6s advanced 1 to 38 in the face of a court petition in Jersey City for the appointment of an equity receiver for the company. Some issues of Studebaker, American & Foreign Power, Certain-Teed, Southern Railways were moderately mixed.

There was a turnover of $2,760,000 in the Federal section compared with $4,210,000 yesterday. Home Owners Loan bonds firmed 1-32 to 8-32 and there were a few Treasury losers of 3-32 to 4-32.

Curb's Prices Close Mixed In Active Sales

Specialties Continue Gains as Trading Volume Drops to 163,000 Shares.

New York, Nov. 8 (AP).—Specialties recorded further gains on the curb exchange today. In the general list, however, profit-taking appeared and final quotations were irregular. Trading was at an active pace, although below yesterday's total.

The list edged forward at the opening, but encountered difficulty at the higher levels. Settling back, prices backed and filled throughout the rest of the day.

Singer Manufacturing went to another new high for the year at 260, up some 10 points. Midvale, Schiff Co. and Safety Car Heating got up around 2 or more each, while issues finishing about a point higher included Gulf Oil, Chicago Rivet & Machine, Great Atlantic & Pacific and Lernor Stores.

Parker Rust Proof was a heavy spot, dipping nearly 2. Distillers Corporation-Seagrams, Hiram Walker, Electric Bond & Share and Creole Petroleum were slightly easier. Aluminum Co. of America, American Cyanamid B, Lake Shore, Swift & Co., Wright Hargreaves and International Petroleum ended steady to a trifle improved.

What the Stock Market Did.

	Thurs	Wed.
Advances	278	517
Declines	295	128
Unchanged	190	142
Total issues	763	787

Stocks—Demand for stocks slackened and the market sold off slightly after a four-day advance. Losses averaged six-tenths of a point. Sales dropped to 843,310 shares.

Bonds—Loans were quiet and fairly steady. The market made an average advance of one-tenth of a point. Sales decreased in volume to $11,379,000.

Curb—Specialties recorded further gains, but profit-taking caused the market to close irregular. Sales volume shrank slightly to 163,000 shares.

Wheat—Values dropped below the dollar mark under a selling drive. Inflation talk did much to pull the market down. December sold at 99½; May, 98⅜.

Cotton—Liquidation pushed prices of cotton slightly lower. The general market declined 6 to 8 points. December sold at 12:16; January, at 12:22.

Sugar—Raw sugar was higher at 2.86; refined was unchanged at 4.65.

Coffee—Soft coffee was quiet. Santos No. 4 sold at 11; Rio No. 7, at 9¼.

Silver—Bar silver was ½ higher, at 53¼ cents per ounce in New York. In London it sold at 23 9-16 pence.

Gold—Bar gold in London at 139 shillings and 2 pence.

Dollar—The United States dollar was still down on foreign exchange. It stood in New York, with reference to other currencies, $5.00¼ to the English pound; 6.58¾ cents to the French franc, and 40.27 cents to the German mark.

Foreign Markets.

(Associated Press.)

London—Wall street's cheerfulness offset the effect of the resignation of the French cabinet, which was generally anticipated on the stock exchange yesterday. Transatlantic issues improved on good buying, and industrials and Argentine rails also were firmed. Gilt-edged securities eased, while gold mining shares developed irregularity. The market closed irregular.

Paris—Prices on the bourse yesterday recovered from their slump on hopes of a quick solution of the cabinet crisis. The closing was firm.

Bulgaria Sends Funds To Pay Part on Interest

New York, Nov. 8.—Speyer & Co. and J. Henry Schroeder Banking Corporation, as American fiscal agents for the Kingdom of Bulgaria League of Nations loans, announce that the Bulgarian Government has transferred sufficient funds in dollars to provide for payment of 32½ per cent of the interest due November 15, 1934 on the 7½ per cent stabilization loan 1928. Payment will be made, on or after that date, at the rate of $12.19 per $37.50 coupon and $6.09 per $18.75 coupon, upon surrender of such coupons.

The American fiscal agents are also prepared to make further payments on the partly paid July 1, 1933, coupons of the 7 per cent settlement loan at the rate of $6.52 per $35 coupon and $3.26 per $17.50 coupon, and on the partly paid November 15, 1932, coupons of the 7½ per cent stabilization loan at the rate of $3.35 per $37.50 coupon and $1.67 per $18.75 coupon, which payments are offered to holders in full settlement of the balances due on these coupons. All coupons surrendered must be accompanied by appropriate letters of transmittal.

Production of Soft Coal Totals 7,200,000 Tons

The National Coal Association, from incomplete car loading reports from the railroads, estimates bituminous coal production in the United States for the week ended November 3 as approximately 7,200,000 net tons. Production for the corresponding week: 1933, 7,015,000 tons; 1932, 7,397,000 tons.

The report of the Bureau of Mines shows production of 7,100,000 tons for the week ended October 20, and 7,115,000 for the week ended October 27, 1934.

Daily Credit of Reserve Banks Averages Two Million Higher

The daily average volume of Federal Reserve bank credit outstanding during the week ended November 7, as reported by the Federal Reserve banks, was $2,457,600,000, an increase of $2,000,000 compared with the preceding week, and a decrease of $107,000,000 compared with the corresponding week in 1933.

On November 7 total Reserve bank credit amounted to $2,440,000,000, a decrease of $15,000,000 for the week. This decrease corresponds with a decrease of $86,000,000 in Treasury cash and deposits with Federal Reserve banks and increases of $6,000,000 in monetary gold stock and $8,000,000 in Treasury and national bank currency, offset in part by increases of $49,000,000 in money in circulation, $26,000,000 in member bank reserve balances and $11,000,000 in non-member deposits and other Federal Reserve acccounts.

There were practically no changes in the system's holdings of bills discounted, bills bought in open market and United States Government securities.

Changes in the amount of Reserve bank credits outstanding and in related items during the week and the year ended November 7, 193, follow:

Farm Products Point Higher During Week

Wheat, Rye, Corn and Oats Record Moderate Gains; Live Stock Steady.

U. S. Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Economics.

Main price movement of farm products was slightly upward near the beginning of the month.

There were moderate gains for wheat, rye, corn and oats and further advances for butter and eggs, also an upward trend for onions, sweet potatoes, lettuce and some varieties of apples.

Live stock prices were fairly steady. Spot cotton averaged a little lower.

Prices of cotton were declining slightly in early November. Continued supplies, due largely to the availability to growers of the 12-cent loan and some increase in the volume of export shipments tended to strengthen spot prices, but prices of new crop futures contracts declined sharply, apparently in anticipation of increasing supplies of American cotton next year. Conditions tending to depress cotton prices were continued dullness in domestic gray cloth, along with lower cloth prices and a somewhat general decline in prices as reflected in prices of commodities and securities. Weather continued generally favorable for harvesting in the remainder of the crop.

The Chicago market on slaughter steers and yearlings recovered declines enforced late in October, which had carried much of the supply to new low prices for the season. The general character of the receipts suggested that finishers are inclined to get out from under high feed costs as quickly as possible and that feeders taken out a few months ago will not stay long in the feed lot. Stocker and feeder trade was very slow. The recent extreme top on fed steers at Chicago was $9.35.

Although dressed market conditions in the pork trade lent no encouragement, the market for live hogs recovered unevenly. Receipts at leading centers showed a moderate decrease. Supplies carried only a small quota of well-finished hogs with weight. The quotable top at Chicago was $5.80.

Cotton Crop In Bales Totals 9,634,000

Production Increased From 9,443,000 in Last Estimates.

(Associated Press.)

A cotton crop of 9,634,000 bales of 500 pounds gross weight each was reported yesterday by the Department of Agriculture as being indicated by conditions November 1.

Indications a month ago were for a crop of 9,443,000 bales, while two months ago a crop of 9,252,000 bales was indicated.

Production last year was 13,047,262 bales. Two years ago 13,003,000 bales were produced and in 1931 production was 17,095,000 bales.

The indicated yield of lint cotton per acre this year is indicated as 169.3 pounds, compared with 165.9 pounds a month ago, 208.5 pounds picked in 1933 and 169.9 pounds the average acre yield 1923-32.

The indicated acre-yield in pounds and indicated total production this year, in bales of 500 pounds gross weight, by States, follow:

Upward Trend Is Looked For In Steel Yield

Current Operations Stand at 26½ Per Cent, Report States.

New York, Nov. 8 (AP).—Extension of the automobile code and the passing of pre-election uncertainties have cleared the way for further improvement in steel demand, according to a summary of the industry issued today by Iron Age.

"While no spectacular gains are likely during the remainder of the year," the publication states, "in view of the approach of the inventory season, a steady and perhaps accelerating upward trend is looked for. In 1933, the month of November marked the low point of steel output in the second half of the year and December brought a substantial increase.

"This year, with current operations at 26½ per cent, as against 26 per cent a year ago, production should follow a similar course. Whether it will rise as high as in December, 1933, when it averaged 33 per cent, will depend mainly on the rapidity with which motor car companies get their new models into full production."

Demand for iron and steel outside the motor industry has shown little expansion, the summary states, although manufacturers of steel barrels and drums are buying more freely, after being out of the market since last June, and farm implement makers are gradually increasing their orders.

The Iron Age composite of steel scrap advanced from $9.63 to $9.71 a ton, and the composites for finished steel and pig iron held unchanged at 2.124 cents a pound and $17.90 a ton.

Napoleon and Uncle Elby

By Clifford McBride

Mr. Man Loses His Boarder

When Jay Bird got through howdying with Billie, he went back behind the crib to Hound Dog, and he just patted him on the back with his wing and told him how glad he was that he had such a nose. And he told him that Billie was just as well and fat as he could be and had his same old grin.

"Well, I'll let him show me that that grin at Blackie's house before long," said Hound Dog. "And now you fly around the circle, going by Uncle Joe's and all the other places where you think you will find any of your folks, and tell them that they needn't look any more. And if you see Jocko tell him there is work for him to do tonight. I am going right back to Blackie's and tell him the good news.

When Hound Dog told Blackie that he had found Billie, Blackie did his regular bear dance out in front of his house, for he certainly was happy. And now pretty soon they were all coming in, for Jay Bird had been working in a hurry, and had soon found nearly all of them. Blackie had them all come in and get a bit of cold dinner, and then Hound Dog said he had done all he could do, and so would go back to Aunt Lindy before she got uneasy. And then Blackie laid his plans for getting Billie out of jail. That night his plan worked.

Mr. Man and his wife had been asleep for a long time, when Who-Who Owl flew over the chicken house and squalled. Rover Dog was asleep, too; but he didn't stay that way. Out he ran, with his loudest bark, after the crazy old bird that was trying to get into the chicken house. The bird flew toward the woods, and he flew so low that Rover could almost catch him. About the time he got to the woods, a great big monkey was tearing down a pile of wood that had been laid all over a chicken coop, and then he opened the door and let a nice fat possum come out. Billie was so thankful to get out that he jumped right into Jocko's arms and hugged his neck. Back to Blackie's they almost flew, and there Billie got a regular bear hug from Blackie, while the birds and Dr. Coon just crowded around and patted him on the back. And Billie just grinned.

Arms Sent to Bolivia From Virginia Cleared

The State Department determined yesterday that a cargo of war materials shipped October 17 from Norfolk, Va., to Bolivia was exempt from the United States embargo on munitions destined for warring Paraguay and Bolivia, the Associated Press says.

The department said the cargo was part of a consignment contracted for prior to May 28, when the embargo was laid down. The department's investigation set at rest suspicions of Paraguayans that the munitions were shipped to Bolivia illegally on the Quaker line steamer San Marcos.

Japanese Ship Feared Lost With Crew of 42

Tokyo, Nov. 8 (AP).—Fear that the Japanese freighter Ranan Maru, with a crew of 42, was destroyed by fire was expressed today in a dispatch from Niigata, North Honshu Island, Japan.

The vessel early today sent out a radio call for help, saying she was afire and drifting northwest of Niigata. No further messages have been received from her and rescue ships were unable to locate the distressed freighter.

Walt Mason Himself

Wealth and Poverty.

I am a rather poor civilian, with just enough to pay my bills; I sometimes wish I had a million, and knew some plutocratic thrills. Then I could pack my trunks and travel to storied places far away, and not be always scratching gravel to earn three paltry bucks a day. Then I could dress in gaudy raiment and like a belted earl appear, nor pawn my hat to make a payment on furniture I bought last year. Then I could have a dozen motors, including dark blue limousines, and dazzle all the toiling voters who have to sweat and earn their beans. Then I could go to high class parties, where all refreshments are the best, and mingle with the gilded smarties who make of life a gorgeous jest. I have such dreams when, on retiring, I sink upon the fragrant hay, and in those dreams I am desiring such wealth as Midas bore away. But when by day I look around me and view the stall-fed millionaires, their signs of weariness astound me, I would not have such grief as theirs. They ride around in costly coaches, but they seem dour and dismal chaps; the shadow of deep grief encroaches upon their tired and wrinkled maps. Sometimes poor delegates annoy us by singing, whistling out of tune, but plutocrats are seldom joyous, they're mourning for a lost doubloon. They're mourning over coin invested in some weak, shaky enterprise; when they were poor perhaps they jested, but now they wipe their streaming eyes.

Sea Scouts Make Progress.

Sea Scouts of the Corinthian Yacht Club are showing the way to veteran sailors on the Potomac River. Their two boats have won three first places and three second places out of four contests sponsored by the Potomac River Sailing Association. The Bobcat and Wildcat are the envy of the entire racing association. Their craft is distinguished by a large black ball on the mainsail. Under the instruction of Frederick Tilp, skipper; John Brumbaugh, mate, and W. L. Preston, counselor, the Corinthian Yacht Club is developing a real sailing school. The Corinthian Sea Scouts meet every Saturday at 7:30 p. m. at headquarters.

Troop 81 Progresses.

George Tolson will act as scoutmaster of Troop 81 since Mr. Deery, scoutmaster of 81, will not attend fall meetings because of his college work. The troop is having a contest. The Scout making the most progress gets an honor medal and many other valuable prizes. There is to be a second, third and fourth prize. The troop goes on a hike once a week. Five Scouts of Troop 81 have joined the Esperanto classes at the Hine Junior High School. Three scouts went to the courts at Powell Junior High October 20. On the hike October 20 four second-class and two first-class tests were passed.

Dr. Ray Wyland to Speak.

Ray O. Wyland, director of education of the National Council, will be the guest of honor at a Scouters' dinner at Sholl's G street cafe, 1219 G street at 6 o'clock, Wednesday. Scouters and their wives are invited. Phone reservations to Walter MacPeek, National 7903.

Press Club Meets.

The Boy Scout Press Club met at headquarters November 1. A special meeting of the executive club was held to settle business. Copy was prepared for club publications and a test given on journalism.

The next meeting will be held at 7 p. m., Thursday, at 1018 Vermont avenue.

Red Skin Division Holds Round-up.

The Red Skin District held its fall outdoor round-up November 3. The affair was under the supervision of District Commissioner Walter McConnaughy. Story telling featured the evening campfire. Troops represented were 27, 38, 81, 18, 89, 489, 620, 312 and 628.

Armistice Day Ceremonies.

Armistice Day ceremonies will be held tomorrow afternoon so as to give more Scouters an opportuntiy to attend. Buses will be at the Zero Milestone, south of the White House, at 1:15. Those using their own transportation can meet the Scouts at Fort Myer Gate to Arlington Cemetery at 1:45. The wreath will be placed on the tomb at 2:30 o'clock.

Court of Awards.

The Court of Awards will be held December 8 at Powell Junior High School at 8 p. m. All applications for eagle badges must be filed at headquarters not later than November 24, and for star, life and palms, not later than December 1.

Chance to Earn.

Bugling Contest.

The annual bugling contest for council and assistant council bugler for 1935 will be held December 7, at 8 p. m., in the auditorium of Powell Junior High School. The present council bugler will not contest.

The one scoring the highest will be commissioned council bugler for 1935 and receive a bugle with bugle banner. The second highest will be commissioned assistant council bugler and receive a bugle banner. Each will receive a bugler's arm insignia.

Eight out of the following 15 calls will be used: First call, second call, reveille, mess, swimming, to the colors, officers call, drill, assembly, retreat, recall, taps, church, fire, call to quarters.

Form counts equal to a call.

Two C. M. O. Events Slated.

On November 24 an outdoor meeting will be held. The place will be announced later.

On December 8 a reforestation trip will be made to Camp Roosevelt. Each troop group will arrange for its own transportation, arriving at Roosevelt as early as possible.

Plans to Charter Troop Papers.

A plan by which troop papers may be chartered has been prepared. The paper will be judged upon its make-up, publication, name, contents, finances and management. If the paper comes up to the standard it will be a chartered publication of the journalism program under the Press Club.

The make-up must be attractive and come up to the rules of journalism. The publication must be at regular dates and the name suitable to a Boy Scout publication. The contents must include at least half a column of editorial comment which must be varied and well expressed. Any advertising must be such that would be suitable to any other Scout publication. The paper must be conducted in a business-like manner and managed by registered Scouts with a responsible adult as adviser. The charter will expire with the troop charter.

Scouts to Build Kavak.

Next week local Scouts will give an exhibition of Eskimo kayak building in the window of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., 727 Thireenth street northwest.

The kayak is closely associated with the romance of the Northland, where to prove himself worthy of a wife a young man must first have built and used a kayak.

Troop 14 Banquet.

Troop 14 will hold its annual banquet at Luther Place Memorial Church Tuesday. Advancement and progress of the Scouts in the past year will be shown the fathers.

Scoutmaster W. C. Cronenberg will present awards to outstanding Scouts in community service, neatness inspection, good turns, religious observance and attendance. The affair is the one time of the year when the Scouts and fathers can get together and discuss scouting.

83 to Go on Hike.

Troop 83 will go to the country next Saturday for a scout picnic. Albert Gatling, scoutmaster, has arranged a special program for the day and at night there will be a campfire and stories.

Troop 43 to Hold Banquet.

The date of the ninth annual banquet of Troop 43, conducted by the National Baptist Memorial Church, has been set for next Friday, when the tenth anniversary of the organization of the troop will be celebrated.

The feature will be an address by Charles Brough, former Governor of Arkansas. Louis B. Grening is scoutmaster.

Capitol and eleventh division scoutmasters or their representatives are asked by District Commissioner Nickel to attend a brief meeting at headquarters, 7:30 p. m., to approve fall plans.

Wanderbirds Plan Excursion To Historic Fort Washington

All-Day Trip Will Bring Hikers Back at 6:30 P. M. Sunday.

By Robert Shosteck.

Ship ahoy, mates! All aboard for the Wanderbirds' trip to the historic Fort Washington on the steamship Gen. Rucker, leaving the War College wharf at 10:30 Sunday. The hikers will tour the famous battleground where King George's redcoats battled the redskins, and visit the haunts of many interesting ducks and shore birds along the broad Piscataway Creek. The spacious steamer in which the Wanderbirds will make this trip was made available to The Washington Post through the courtesy of the War College authorities.

Prospective Wanderbirds and members of the club planning to go on this trip will meet at the end of the Seventh street wharves car line at 10 a. m. From this point the group will enter the War College grounds, going directly to the pier where the Gen. Rucker will await the hikers. The boat trip down the Potomac will take more than one hour. The steamer will leave Fort Washington at 5 p. m., returning to the wharf by 6:30.

The fort authorities will provide a guide who will lead the visitors through the old fort, built about 1815, and to the site and remains of the old colonial mansion which once stood here. Nearby, too, is the battleground where, about 1695, the English garrison under Col. John Washington, the grandfather of George Washington, decisively defeated 2,500 Indians on Piscataway Creek. The 1,500 colonial militiamen forced the withdrawal of the Indians from the Potomac Valley. The garrison was withdrawn shortly before the Revolutionary War, only to be reestablished about 1815 under the direction of Maj. L'Enfant, who laid out the City of Washington.

In August, 1814, the British fleet ascended the Potomac. Upon the approach of the fleet, the garrison of 80 men at Fort Washington spiked their guns and retreated without firing a shot. The subsequent destruction of the fortification nearly left the Nation's Capital and the important port of Alexandria to the mercy of the British. In 1861 a detachment of Marines took over the post, which, about 1863, became an important link in the chain of defenses that girdled Washington.

From the parapet of the old fort one can see the Washington Monument in the distance. Across the river may be seen the Masonic Memorial in Alexandria, Fort Hunt, Mount Vernon, Fort Humphreys, and the Army Engineer School.

After the tour of the fort, the hikers will follow the trail along Piscataway Creek for about 2½ miles. Along the shore may be seen ducks, herons, and many other types of waterbirds. The group also will be on the lookout for late fall violets and other flowers. After a brief stop, the hikers will return to Fort Washington in time to board the Gen. Rucker, which leaves at 5 o'clock. There will be no charge for the boat ride.

Officers Elected By Hernden Club

Mrs. Arthur Hyde Buell Leads Fortnightly.

Herndon, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—The Herndon Fortnightly Club was entertained at the home of Mrs. C. N. Florance today, when the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Arthur Hyde Buell; vice president, Mrs. Marvin Perkins; secretary, Mrs. Alam Breckenridge; assistant secretary, Mrs. Harold F. Weiler; treasurer, Mrs. Frederick W. Robinson; librarian, Mrs. Russell Lynn, and assistant librarian, Miss Elizabeth Leenhardt. Trustees elected were Miss Maria R. Bready, Mrs. Russell Lynn, Miss Nora Ellmore, Mrs. Marvin Perkins and Mrs. J. T. Jones.

The secretary reported $50 from the benefit card parties at the homes of Dr. and Mrs. William Meyer and the Herndon Hotel. This amount was applied on the library building fund. The next meeting of the club will be at the home of Mrs. A. H. Buell, Wednesday, December 5.

Stephens City Club Awarded Grand Prize

Winchester, Nov. 8 (Spl.).—The Stephens City Home Demonstration Club won the grand prize at the annual achievement day program in Winchester, it was announced today by Miss Elizabeth Farrar, home demonstration agent.

At a meeting of the advisory board yesterday, projects were outlined for the ensuing year and plans for raising funds to carry on the work discussed. B. L. Hummel, of Virginia Polytechnic Institute, extension specialist in organization, spoke.

Seaway Pact May Win Out Next Session

But World Court Protocal Faces Harder Sledding in New Senate.

(Associated Press.)

Senate Democratic leaders, taking stock of their amazing new strength, see good reason to believe the St. Lawrence seaway treaty will be approved at the next session.

They are not so certain about the protocol, now a decade old, calling for American adherence to the world court. The foreign relations committee has set this proposal down for action early in January. Like the seaway treaty, it will require a two-thirds vote for adoption.

President Roosevelt has urged approval of the court protocol, as did Presidents Harding, Coolidge and Hoover.

President Roosevelt strongly advocates the St. Lawrence navigation and power project, designed to open up vast areas of the interior to ocean-going shipping through a deep waterway from the north Atlantic to the Great Lakes. The treaty was rejected last March 14.

With 88 Senators present and voting, only 46 voted "aye," as against 42 in the negative. Fifty-nine "ayes" were necessary for approval.

Seven of the opponents on that roll call were defeated either in primaries or Tuesday's elections. How their successors will vote is a question, but President Roosevelt expects to resubmit the treaty with modifications which he believes will weaken much of the opposition.

Kiwanians Elect Dr. C. P. Kennedy

Fredericksburg Members Hear Educational Needs.

Fredericksburg, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—Dr. C. P. Kennedy was elected president of the Kiwanis Club at a meeting yesterday at the Kenmore Tavern.

Three high school students spoke before the club in connection with American Education Week. Cleve Johnson, president of the senior class; Miss Nan Winkler and Lockhart Scott gave short addresses on public school work.

Dr. Sidney L. Scott was named program committee chairman for January. Guests of the club were Edwin Hill, international Kiwanis trustee, and several visiting members.

94-Year-Old Virginian Again Votes Democratic

Halifax, Va., Nov. 8 (AP).—Armistead Barksdale voted as usual Tuesday the straight Democratic ticket, he said. At the age of 94 this oldest of Halifax County's three surviving Confederate veterans boasts that he never has failed to vote in an election and never has deviated from the straight Democratic ticket.

Roosevelts to Hold Reunion in Georgia

President and Mrs. Roosevelt will have their Thanksgiving dinner at Warm Springs, Ga., when the day will be the occasion of a family reunion. Members of the board of trustees of the Warm Springs Foundation and patients there will attend the party.

Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Dall and her children, "Sistie" and "Buzzie," will be the only members of the family to remain in Washington. Mrs. Roosevelt will leave New York Monday night for St. Louis, where she will attend the conference on Mobilization of Human Needs and will join the President at Harrodsburg, Ky. Mrs. Roosevelt will return to Washington from Warm Springs December 1, but the President will not return until the fifth.

Code Violation Rising in U. S., A. F. L. Reports

'Real Improvement' Over a Year Ago Denied in Survey.

(Associated Press.)

Increasing code violation from coast to coast and "no real improvement in business over a year ago" were found by the American Federation of Labor in a survey just completed.

The survey consisted of reports from 71 organizers in 29 States. Forty-three found increasing or widespread voliation of codes in their areas. Only seven reported violations on the wane. Several said the NRA Blue Eagle no longer drew the respect of buyers in their districts.

In summarizing the reports, the federation attributed the increase in violations to:

"(1) The fact that code authorities, themselves, are not in favor of the codes and hence do not bother to see them enforced.

"(2) The employes, particularly in unorganized plants, are afraid of losing their jobs for reporting any infractions of the codes.

"(3) The failure of the Administration, itself, to command the respect of business, i. e., restoring the Blue Eagle to companies who have violated the codes, without prosecuting the cases."

"The drought, increasing unemployment and lack of cooperation on the part of business with the National Recovery Administration" also were said to be "items of real importance" in existing conditions.

Bus Line Head Defends Firm's Responsibility

Baltimore, Nov. 8 (AP).—William Nevin, vice president of the Nevin Atlantic Bus Line, Inc., testified before the public service commission today that the company might be forced out of business if its operating permit in this State is revoked.

Nevin said Maryland is the connecting link between the Northern and Southern Nevin companies, and revocation of the permit would mean a division of the territory.

The commission opened its hearing on the service and mechanical condition of the bus line on November 1 with a possible view toward revoking its permit because of a report made by the commission engineer.

Thomas Wilson, manager of the garage of the Nevin Terminal at Washington, one of the first witnesses heard today, said the equipment operating on the Washington-New York run was being placed in a condition which would "more than satisfy the commission."

Mild Scarlet Fever Cases Halt Classes

Culpeper, Va., Nov. 8 (Spl.).—Despite the efforts of the public health authoriteis in enforcing quarantine and isolating cases of contagious diseases, scarlet fever, which has been reported in the county since the reopening of public schools in the early fall, has spread in some sections, causing the temporary suspension of school schedules.

The Salem High School, six miles from here, has been closed by quarantine. In most instances the cases are of a mild nature, causing more inconvenience than real suffering.
